Record Auction Sales

HIRAM H. PARKE, president of the Parke-Bernet Galleries, Inc., New York City, has announced that auction sales of art and literary property in the 1944-45 season set the all-time record high total of $6,165,920.50, surpassing not only any previous total in the Galleries' own history, but in the history of its predecessors.

Mr. Parke, who this year completed 50 years' service in the auction field, 35 of which were in association with the Parke-Bernet Galleries and its predecessor companies, stated: "Prices during the 1944-45 season averaged about the same as last year. Almost the only difference was in the greater selectivity displayed by the discerning buyer in the judgment of of quality and aesthetic merit. A generous supply of art property of all kinds and a largely increased volume of books, manuscripts and other literary items were made available through release of many estate and private collections, augmented by the liquidation of a few dealers' stocks, either in part or whole, because of changes in set-up due to war-time conditions. Buying by European refugees was markedly less than in the previous two years, but American purchases on the other hand were materially extended as people became more antiques conscious. There was some buying for European accounts in anticipation of firms re-opening abroad, and of expatriates returning to their home countries, which was intensified by the uncertainty as to how much native art and literary treasure had been destroyed or removed by the enemy. Moreover, many of the foreign collectors who came here for the duration have now made plans to stay in America permanently, though in the case of both art and book dealers, some will open European branches. Whether private or professional collector, their plans mean an increased clientele for the art and book trade.

"The Oriental market has been particularly active, with an appreciable amount of buying for Chinese accounts of porcelains and pottery, jades and fine lacquer. In the painting field, genre or story-telling pictures, which for a time were eclipsed in public interest by works of the modernistic and non-objective schools, reached, after several years of increasing popularity, an apex of demand in the William H. and Cornelius Vanderbilt sale.

"French 18th century furniture continued in the forefront of sophisticated choice with the Virginia M. Rosenthal collection as the most outstanding sale of this elegant art. Silver, not only the rare collectors' example such as Queen Anne, Georgian and Early American, but also modern silver with the Tiffany, Gorham and other contemporary stamps, was in increased demand, due undoubtedly to some actual scarcity of silver in the general market, as well as to the intrinsic value of this class of art property. Linens, particularly ordinary household linens, which are almost always a component feature in the liquidation of estates, brought unusually high prices, reflecting the scarcity of such commodities in the ordinary retail sources of supply. Another class of object that showed increased favor with our auction buyers was modern Dresden china figures and groups and other European decorative ceramics. An immense public demand for Americana was proven by the orderly dispersal of the extensive Haskell collection which from April, 1944, to February, 1945, was sold in six parts for a total of $602,428., in addition to our regular schedule of American sales.

"Auction prices over a period of years reflect the up-swing or down-swing of general prosperity of the country. With post-war plans for expanding markets and the stabilization of wages and employment, we can look forward to an era of sustained consumer demand, and I would expect the auction market to reflect these economic gains in good prices. The American people have an ever-widening appreciation of the great artistic heritage of the past, and look to auction sales among other agencies to make available to them examples of their cultural interests."

LARGEST TOTALS AND HIGHEST PRICES

Among the 104 sales held at the Galleries during the last season, the highest total was made by parts III-VI of the Americana collection of the late Mrs. J. Amory Haskell, which reached $375,354, and the William H. and Cornelius Vanderbilt collection of Barbizon and genre paintings, which was dispersed for $323,195. Parts I and II of the Frank J. Hogan library, comprising English and American literature, brought $285,828.; French 18th century furniture and works of art, property of Mrs. Joseph Heine, $282,652; and British 18th century portraits, French furniture and works of art from the collection of the late Edward T. Stotesbury, comprising 38 catalogue lots, $192,575. French 18th century furniture and works of art, property of the estate of the late Virginia M. Rosenthal, brought $190,742; and precious-stone jewelry, property of the estate of the late Anna L. Bevan and other private owners, sold in one session for $182,822.

"The highest individual prices of the season were made by Poe's manuscript of "The Murders in the Rue Morgue," sold for $34,000; the paintings "Madonna and Child" by Fra Filippo Lippi and "The Water Carrier" by Millet, each of which realized $30,000; and a Georgian silver banqueting service for 24 persons and a tea service by Paul Storr, which made $29,500. Next were "The Sower" by Millet, $26,000; "The Vernon Children" by Romney, $22,000; "Marie Madeleine Guimard" by Fragonard, $17,000, and the manuscript of Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend," $17,000. A Beauvais 18th century chinoiserie tapestry, after Boucher and Dumont brought $16,000; "Laughing Child" by Frans Hals, $15,500, and "Portrait of a Laughing Boy" by the same artist, $15,000; and a first edition of Poe's "Tamerlane," $15,500.

Other outstanding prices of the season included:

$14,500 for the "The Messenger of Love" by Fragonard

$13,500 for a diamond necklace

$13,000 for a portrait of Constantyn Huygens, by Van Dyck

$12,500 for "The Knitting Lesson" by Millet

$12,000 for "The Adoration of the Magi," a Brussels Gothic silver-woven tapestry

$11,500 for "Portrait of Rembrandt's Father" by Rembrandt

$11,000 for "Ladies of the First Empire" by Boldini

$11,000 for "Madonna and Child" by Perugino

$10,500 for a Beauvais tapestry, entitled "Chinese Dancing"

$10,000 for a collection of forty-two 17th and 18th century enamel miniatures

$10,000 for an important Royal Beauvais tapestry salon suite

$8,000 for "En Foret" by Bonheur

TRENDS OF THE SEASON

The enduring popularity of American and English 18th century furniture was demonstrated by consistently good prices brought by the last parts of the Haskell and Lorimer collections; and by other similar sales. A few of the notable prices paid for English and American furniture include: $6,000 for a set of eight Queen Anne claw-and-ball-foot dining chairs; $3,700 for a Chippendale tilting-top piecrust table; $3,700 for a Charles II tall-case clock by Samuel Knibb; $3,300 for a set of six Chippendale side chairs; $2,800 for a Chippendale shell-carved mahogany block-front desk; and $2,800 for a pair of Georgian shell-carved side chairs.

Buyers availed themselves of the opportunity to buy fine French 18th century furniture offered in the Rosenthal, Heine and other collections, bidding $9,500 for a Louis XV suite of six fauteuils and a canape covered in Beauvais tapestry; $5,000 for a pair of Louis XV carved walnut and Aubusson tapestry bergeres; $4,400 for two sets of eight Directoire dining chairs in needlepoint, $4,274 for a suite of six Regence fauteuils and a canape in Aubusson tapestry; and $3,600 for a Louis XVI desserte, mounted in bronze dore.

Paintings continued in heavy demand. There were fifteen sales of paintings alone and, in addition, groups of paintings were included in many other sales. An interesting development of the season occurred when the 19th century genre canvases included in the Vanderbilt collection realized excellent prices. In addition to the high prices listed in the previous part of this review, $6,100 was paid for "Playing Chess on the Terrace" by Bargue, $6,000 for "Les Parisiennes" by Boldini, $5,700 for "The Artist and His Model" by Bargue, and $5,100 for "Reception of the Prince de Conde by Louis XIV" by Gerome, clearly indicating a revival of public appreciation for the 'story-telling' mode in painting, with its clear, meticulously rendered detail.

The market for Chinese works of art was good. A few of the carvings and ceramics that brought high prices were: a Ch'ien Lung carved white jade vase, $2,500; a pair of Imperial carved spinach jade table screens, $2,100, and a tripod koro, $1,600; a T'ang polychromed glazed pottery water buffalo group $1,500; and a small Ming ivory white 'soft paste' porcelain bottle $1,050.

Early American and Georgian silver found ready buyers: a caudle cup by William Cross, Boston, brought $2,400; a Georgian service of flatware, $2,000; a George III tea tray by Paul Storr, $1,675; a George III skittle-ball teapot on stand, $1,250; and a garniture of four George II oval platters by Peter Archambo, $1,000.

The tapestries, rugs, objets d'art and bibelots which impart color and variety to many collections, as usual, attracted buyers. A few of the noteworthy items were:

Gournai Gothic millefleurs tapestry with personages, $6,500

Antique Persian hunting carpet, $5,500

George III chased gold and agate jeweled necessaire, with watch, by John Barbot, $5,400

Imperial Turkish 16th century prayer rug, $5400

Gothic drap d'or boucle cut crimson velvet and needlepainted cope, $4,500

Pair Meissen porcelain bird statuettes, modeled by J. J. Kandler, $3,400

Grand silver-mounted and sculptured ivory and lapis lazuli memorial group, $3,300

Chamberlain's Worcester armorial porcelain dinner service (circa 1805), $2,300

Louis XV gold and enamel snuff box with miniatures, set with rose diamonds, $1,700

BEST SEASON FOR BOOKS, AUTOGRAPHS AND PRINTS

This was the most active season in the history of Parke-Bernet Galleries for books, autographs and prints. Thirty-seven sales were held, resulting in a total of $1,272,426, the highest for any year since 1929. Among the outstanding sales, in addition to Parts I and II of the Hogan collection, were Parts III and IV of the rare autographs and books of the John Gribbel collection, which sold for $118,297; and the library of Frederick Peck, dispersed in three parts for $100,538. Two sales especially interesting for their unusual material were the Alfred B. Maclay collection of books and periodicals covering five centuries of sport; and Japanese prints collected by the late Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Garland. Six sales of prints were held, the favorable results indicating that the public was again interested in purchasing these works.

A few of the interesting items of the season were:

Keats' "Poems," presentation copy to Wordsworth, inscribed by Keats and with a pencil drawing, probably by Haydon, $9,750

"The Spy" by Cooper, first edition, $7,600

Orme's "Collection of British Field Sports," $6,500

Letter by Abraham Lincoln to Maj. Gen. McClellan, $5,450

Complete Issue of "The United States Sporting Magazine," $4,750

Collection of letters by Thomas Jefferson, being reminiscences of Patrick Henry, $4,750

Autograph music score of Von Flotow's opera "Martha," $4,700

"The Raven" by Poe, first edition, with Poe's manuscript of the poem's last stanza, $4,700

"Vanity Fair" by Thackeray, first issue of the first edition, $4,500

Other items that brought high prices were Gould's "The Family of Humming Birds," atlas folio, $4,200; Swift's "Travels, By Lemuel Gulliver," first edition, $4,200; a manuscript valentine by Poe "To Miss Louise Olivia Hunter," $3,900; the original manuscript of an early version of "Auld Lang Syne" contained in a letter by Burns, $3,900; and Button Gwinnett's Bible with his earliest known signature, $3,800. Shelley's "Adonais," first edition, sold for $3,250; the manuscript of Martin's "Old Mother Hubbard and Her Dog" for $3,250; "Christ and the Virgin Enthroned," an etching by Schongauer, for $1,500; and "Landscape with a Cottage and Haybarn," an etching by Rembrandt, for $1,500.

ATTRACTIVE ITEMS IN THE LOWER PRICE RANGE

In addition to the items of museum quality which made the season's highest prices, there were thousands of others that offered attractive opportunities for buyers of discriminating taste but moderate income. These included English and French furniture of the period, such as a Queen Anne inlaid walnut tallboy, $120; a carved maple side chair of the same reign, $60; Chippendale examples, including a carved mahogany vitrine cabinet, $150, and a stoll in needlepoint, $60; a Sheraton inlaid and decorated satinwood bookcase, $250; a Henri II carved and turned walnut draw-top library table, $175; two Louis XVI carved beechwood and rose satin fauteuils, $175. Among the decorations were an Aubusson 18th century silk-woven landscape tapestry, $375; a Georgian style paneled pine room, $200; a Russian enamel and gilded silver sugar basket by Khlebnikov, $45; a George II Irish repousse silver creamer, $50; a refectory table cloth of filet linen and point de Milan laces, $60; a Copeland Spode white and gold porcelain dinner service, $50.

The books included such excellent values as Byron's "Don Juan," first editions of the complete series, $100; Gray's "Odes," the genuine first edition, $160; a tall, uncut copy of Sheridan's "The Critic ,"$27.50; and Fielding's "Tom Jones," the first edition in six volumes, $140. Others were the rare first edition of "Desperate Remedies," Hardy's first book, $70; the first edition in original boards of Charles Lamb's "Elia," $80; and the first edition in original boards, uncut, of "Voices in the Night" by Longfellow, $17.50.

Grottoes

We have mentioned it before, but when thoughts turn to armchair travel, your correspondent invariably thinks of the traveling that has been done via the mail, by William Sheehan of Georgia, and his sister.

These two have more than 625 small pictures and post cards of replicas of the famous Lourdes grotto in Lourdes, France. Their pictures have been procured from almost every state in the Union and from many foreign countries.

They have discovered beautifully artistic grottoes in remote mountain spots, ranging in material used from coral to field and limestone.

Some of the grottoes have stones from the original. Some have statues bought and blessed at Lourdes. Some are lighted with Neon; some have the altars encased in glass.

They have been told that the oldest replica of the Lourdes grotto is in Emmettsburg, Maryland, the smallest on a roof garden of St. Joseph's Home, Worcester, Mass. There are many more stories of unusual grottoes which these Georgians have found through their wanderings via the post card hobby.

Police Material

In celebration of the 100th anniversary of the founding of the present Police Department of the City of New York, the Museum of the City of New York recently installed a special exhibition entitled, "New York's Finest—Three Centuries of Police Protection."

The exhibition, planned and arranged by Jerome Irving Smith, curator, was made possible largely through the courtesy of Jay Irving who lent generously from his great collection of police material. A dramatic feature of the exhibition is a set designed and painted by Robert S. Thomas which consists of a series of enlarged and animated pictures done in the style of woodcuts from the Police Gazette showing a Black Maria discharging prisoners, a police court scene and a view of a prison cell.

The exhibition, the most complete and comprehensive ever staged in the history of the New York Police, traces police protection from Dutch times to the present by means of approximately 500 prints, drawings, paintings, photographs, manuscripts, uniforms, badges, police clubs and other memorabilia. The City of New York has lent original Dutch ordinances establishing our first police in 1658. These documents, on public view for the first time, tell of the duties of the Rattle Watch who patrolled the streets of early New Amsterdam from sunset to dawn. The men of this watch were equipped with a metal helmet, a halberd and carried a pike, a lantern, an hour glass and a rattle which was used to give an alarm of crime or fire discovered on their beats. This original uniform is shown in silhouette on a wall, which also contains prints of early prisons, and documents describing the appointment of early police magistrates, the arrest of an individual, and other events requiring police attention during the 17th century. The Dutch system of watchmen prevailed through the colonial period and up to the early 19th century with variations—all of which is illustrated by means of documents, lithographs, and a water color drawing of a 19th century watchman done by Nicolino V. Calyo.

In May, 1845, the old system of watchmen (men who during the day carried on their jobs as tradesmen and at night patrolled various sections of New York) was superseded by the Municipal Police Department composed of a chief, George Matsell, police captains and patrolmen. They wore a star shaped badge but refused to wear uniforms as they considered themselves above wearing the livery of servants. Finally in 1854, convinced of the dignity and importance given them by a regulation dark blue serge costume, the men accepted the wearing of uniforms. In 1857, the State, dissatisfied with the Municipal Police Department which it considered corrupt, established the Metropolitan Police Department, and for a time New Yorkers witnessed the phenomenon of two Police Departments working at the same time. However, the Metropolitan Police Department prevailed and remained in power until 1870 when the Municipal Police Department was reorganized. Prints show the activities of the police in quelling riots, aiding the public, patrolling the harbor, capturing burglars and controlling traffic.

Among the three dimensional objects shown is a police club rejected by the Patent Office as cruel and inhuman. Invented in 1857, this club was so constructed that should an offender grab it from the policeman, the officer could pull a lever which released tiny blades in a porcupine effect. Also from the Jay Irving collection are bull's eye lanterns carried by early policemen, wooden handcuffs, the mace belonging to Jacob Hays, a famous constable of the early 19th century and his book noting arrests; shields belonging to the first chief of theMetropolitan Police, George Walling; gold badges set with diamonds which were presented to Superintendent Patrick Campbell of the Brooklyn Police Department in 1867, and many handsomely carved ivory presentation clubs.

The Museum of Art, Rhode Island School of Design, lent a painting "The Traffic Halt" by H. Schuldt showing a policeman of 1878 holding up traffic while he leads a group of children across the street. Harvard College Library has lent a colored lithograph "The Three Graces" showing the first living nude models who exhibited themselves in New York and were raided by the police in 1847. The New-York Historical Society has lent many of the early police documents and prints. Brown Brothers have lent over a hundred photographs showing the activities of the police from 1870 to the present, and from the Police Academy of the Police Department of the City of New York have come early police appointments, medals, and original police blotters of the mid-nineteenth century. Of a humorous nature are several cartoons drawn by Jay Irving who has made a study of the New York police. There is even a stop and go street traffic signal of the 1920's with a policeman next to it on duty.

Brocaded Textiles Of Museum Quality

Twenty-five magnificent hand-loomed silk brocades of the late 17th and 18th centuries, lent by Mrs. Catherine D. Wentworth of Santa Barbara, Calif., are now on exhibition in the textile gallery of The Metropolitan Museum of Art. Of special interest to fabric designers, these textiles are Italian and French. The pieces are exceptional in quality and in size.

Eighteen Italian textiles, not so well known as French brocades, are shown, besides an Italian gown of the period, made of elegant cloth similar to the fabrics exhibited in cases. The characteristics of gorgeousness and delicacy typical of the Rococo period in Europe are apparent in the rich floral designs, the bright but subtle color combinations, and the superb workmanship. Mrs. Wentworth's textiles will be on view through the summer, giving textile designers ample opportunity to study them.

In addition, about seventy extra-

By W. TUDOR HARRELL

THE oldest bicycle club in America is the Boston Bicycle Club organized in 1878. C. E. Pratt, Captain, led the pleasure trip "A Wheel Around the Hub," in 1879. Dr. Walter Kendall, poet, cyclist, and retired dentist of Quincy, has been President since 1887.

C. E. Pratt's 'American Bicycler' for 1879 gives the following:

Boston Bi. Club (1st) 2-11-1878
Suffolk Bi. Club (died after 1 year) 4-8-1878
San Francisco Bi. Club 1878
Capitol Bi. Club (Wash) 1-31-1879
Massachusetts Bi. Club 1879

Probably the first man to own and ride a high-wheeler in the United States (a Duplex-Excelsior, English model) was Alfred D. Chandler. This was about the year 1877. However, A. T. Lane of Montreal is said to have owned one in 1874.

The Little Falls Cycling Club of New York, organized July 2, 1894, and according to James F. Leigh, past president, it merged after a few years into the Little Falls Athletic Association, long ago extinct.

Some literature on cycling, 1885-1899.

League of American Wheelmen Road Book of Maryland by Conway W. Sams, President of Maryland Division, 1897.

Clubs and Clubmen of Baltimore published by Mercantile Publishing Co. 1893.

The Baltimore Sun describes a meet in Frederick, Md., 7-5-1898 and refers to one the previous year on July 4.

The same paper for July 3, 1896 described an event in Cambridge, Md., and in 1890 the affair moved to Hagerstown. The Baltimore Sun of May 3, 1934, reproduced an old photograph of the fast division of the Baltimore branch of L. A. W. Photographs of some of the members of the Centaur Cycle Club organized in 1887 appeared in the Evening Sun, June 11, 1936 and June 25, 1936.

New Type of Automobiliana Collection

Paul Carrig, Chicago artist, is delving into an unusual branch of the automobiliana hobby. What started as a hobby of drawing mechanical automobiles has developed into a work of art. He has completed 20 drawings in watercolors of various old time models, and he plans to continue until he has a representative collection of all outstanding motor car models.

Mr. Carrig calls his collection "Hall of Famous Old Time Cars." He uses as models various literature which he finds in research libraries, and the old time models.

To Save Work and Patience

An advertiser asks us to print something to urge the readers to be careful in addressing letters. She points out that she has had many letters received with incorrect address. Apparently people answer ads and then address the envelopes. She seems to think that civilians are about as jittery as the wounded soldiers who have come back and gone to work, many of them in the Post Office.

The very fact that the Post Office employees are over-worked is only more reason why you should be careful in getting the correct addresses. We know from our own experience that there is something to her suggestion. Hired help is often rude and careless, and the owners of the business are often over-worked. Then when the letter gets to the Post Office, they are short of help, and naturally a street number that is only a little wrong and would be delivered promptly in normal times is sent back. We have had mail that obviously was intended for a well-known place returned to us.

However, get the right address, and it will save work and patience all around.

Modern Paintings Bring Modern Prices At New York Sale

SOME GREAT sales of paintings are being held these days. At a recent New York auction, this work (left) brought $1400. It is by Degas, a French painter. Look at the shapely leg and intelligent face on that classic figure. Anybody who would not give $1400 for that is crazy. To sit and gaze at her in your living room would be the height of something or other.

Now here's a landscape by Soutin, a Lithuanian painter of modernistic bent, entitled Landscape. The description calls for a village road bordered by houses and trees in richly varied foliage. If you can't see it, that is proof you have been drunk. It brought $1600.

Some people like nudes in their collections, and here's a classic one, again by Degas, entitled Femme a Sa Toilette. Lest your eyesight be poor, or your imagination warped, she is wiping her back with a towel. This painting brought $3500 American paper money. Nudes always bring more than landscapes because of the equation of horse flesh.

But toward the end of the sale, the buyers apparently ran out of currency. Here's one by Jean Lurcat which brought only $300. After a study of the dress draping, the gazelle neck, and the classic profile, if we could not have gotten more than three hundred paper dollars for that painting, we would have thrown it out of the window. Look at the work the artist had to put on this, for example getting an expression in the eyes like Mona Lisa. The eye is a white space drawn in the shape of an elongated diamond. Then you just draw a circle in the front part. There.

Some readers out in the Middle West where people do not know much in general and particularly are not up on art will say, "That's just made-up stuff. HOBBIES is kidding us." Nope. These are actual reproductions from the official catalog of the sale and will be sent for inspection to any reader of HOBBIES who furnishes the postage of about 10c. There is no joke about it unless it is perpetrated by the printing plant at Washington which keeps printing so much paper money.

Some will insist that we should also publish a picture of the buyers to go alongside the paintings. That would make an interesting study in physiognomy, capacitation and circumscribed qualificatory—as well as staple and fancy a'ht.

Recitation from the Late Sarah Bernhardt

Prayer for our Enemies (Louis Payen), a Recitation in French by Sarah Bernhardt. Recorded in 1918 and now republished by the Collectors Record Shop of New York City.

Sarah Bernhardt (1845 - 1923), the most famous actress of her day, needs no introduction here. She was especially noted for the thrilling quality of her voice and her records are eagerly sought after by collectors. The present example is a re-recording of a 1918 vertical-cut Aeolian-Vocalion (No. 22035). Unlike the original, it can be played on any phonograph. The dubbing has been well done and the pressing is of good quality.

Louis Payen's Priere pours nos enemies is an impassioned, embittered plea to God for vengeance against the invaders of France. It expresses what all French people must have felt so strongly in 1918, at the end of four long years of terribly destructive war, and what they must feel so much more strongly right now. Today, the most striking thing about the poem is that it applies even more to the Nazis under Hitler than it did to the Kaiser's armies.

"They have revived a brutal way of living—
Of murder and pillaging and fire.
Exalted are their chiefs and not for the virtues

A reasoning world would hasten to reward.
No! violence and might proclaim the hero—
And piteous are the human spoils he reaps."

Sarah Bernhardt, needless to say, puts her heart and soul into her reading of Payen's poem and when she comes to the concluding lines:

"Fill Thou their cup of anguish to the brim
For all the ills we suffered at their hands!
Let them repent their wanton rise to power;
Let them atone for crimes that pass belief.
Unveil the sun of freedom once again
On all Thy people, for so long enslaved,
And never let a monstrous force arise
To hurl us back to savage darkness' rim
. . . . . .
Forgive them not—they know well what they do."

she rises to such a pitch of overwhelming ferocity that it sends chills running up and down the spine. (And it makes you wonder how on earth a woman of 73 could achieve such a climax!) Listening to the performance is like seeing the ghost of Bernhardt, of all French dead, pointing an accusing finger at the generation which permitted the rise of Adolf Hitler.

(NOTE: The excellent English version of the poem that is supplied with each copy of the record is by Ellen Lebow.)

The Curious History of Music Boxes

By Mosoriak & Heckert

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison. II.

By ULYSSES ("JIM") WALSH

THE FIRST Anthony and Harrison duet record appears to have been made for Edison, the company with which the singers were most closely associated for the greater part of their careers. It appeared in the May, 1905, record list and, rather oddly, was not a "sacred song," in the strict sense of the term. Instead, it was a musical setting of Longfellow's famous poem, "Excelsior."

In those days Edison published a little monthly magazine, "The New Phonogram," devoted to giving descriptions of records and answering questions about recording artists. Of "Excelsior," the Phonogram said:

"This famous musical setting by M. W. Balfe of Longfellow's poem introduces a new team of duettists in Anthony and Harrison, who sing tenor and baritone respectively . . . The singers are accompanied by the orchestra . . . The record is one that will be wanted by every lover of high class music."

The singers' true gospel hymn note was struck in October, 1905, when a two-minute cylinder 9105, "When the Mists Have Rolled Away," was issued and had a huge sale. Said the New Phonogram:

"A sacred selection, the words of which were written by Annie Herbert and the music by Ira D. Sankey. It makes a splendid duet record. As Messrs. Anthony and Harrison are both choir singers in one of the principal New York churches they are able to give the hymn a perfect interpretation."

The team appears to have made no Columbia records until two cylinders, 33034 and 33035, were issued in December, 1906. The selections were "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning" and "Over the Line." In ensuing months, these hymns were also offered on discs, and Anthony and Harrison discs and cylinders appeared almost every month.

For some reason, the now prosperous and popular tenor and baritone did not make a Victor connection until 1910. On page 4 of Victor's July record supplement of that year, under the heading, "The First Anthony-Harrison Duet," the following appeared:

"5780. 'See the Pale Moon' . . . The Victor announces with pleasure the engagement of these well-known singers for a series of duets, both secular and sacred. The first of these is a smooth and perfectly balanced rendition of Fabio Campana's famous duet, which many great singers have been pleased to include in their repertoire.

"The fact that these duettists have been singing together for a long time will be quite evident to those who hear this beautiful record. The perfect sympathy which exists between the artists is a delight to the listener."

During the next two years, the tenor and baritone sang several hymns for Victor, but since their work for that company began comparatively late, their Victor list never attained the proportions of their Edison and Columbia titles.

About this time, Mr. Wheeler made one or two Columbia records under the name of Frederick Wheeler, and John Young records appeared in both Victor and Columbia lists.

The May, 1912, complete Victor record catalog carried a biographical sketch of Mr. Young, accompanied by a photograph of the tenor, who in those days disguised his youthful appearance by wearing a mustache. It read:

"John Young is one of America's representative concert tenors and has won great popularity because of his fine voice, the intelligence and good taste of his singing, his unusually good enunciation and agreeable personality.

"Mr. Young has filled engagements with some of the foremost musical societies and festivals, including the New York Oratorio Society, Brooklyn Institute, Albany Musical Association, Troy Choral Club, Syracuse Liederkranz, Choral Club of St. Paul, etc., and at the Annual Festivals in Nashua, Manchester and Macon."

The tenor also told me that he had sung as soloist with many of the large symphony orchestras and in concert with some of the most famous operatic stars—all of which is evidence that he possessed vocal ability far in excess of that required to sing hymns of the sort popular in country churches. Although his voice was too light for "heroic" roles, he occasionally made operatic records in English, a notable one being the Miserere from Trovatore, with Elise Stevenson as the soprano, sung for Columbia.

Mr. Young was exceptionally careful to make sure that no harm befell his voice. Billy Murray laughingly told me that, on a number of occasions when he and Young went out together in the evenings, his friend would walk with a handkerchief placed over his mouth as a precaution against taking cold. This extreme caution was puzzling to the immortal Billy, who trained for recording engagements by going to baseball games or six-day bicycle races and yelling his head off.

During this period, Mr. Wheeler also was successful in concert work, besides making records for all the companies then putting out discs and cylinders in America. He appears to have acquired the sobriquet of "the Golden Voiced Baritone," judging by an item in the March, 1911, issue of the Talking Machine News, of London:

"James F. Harrison, known throughout our colonies as the Golden Voiced Baritone, who recently finished his American tour with Sembrich, the great operatic singer, was everywhere voted an enormous success. Edison Amberol record No. 680, 'Tell Mother I'll Be There,' is recorded by this famous artist."

"Of course," Mr. Wheeler remarked, in writing to me, "Mr. Young and myself were not confined to the recording of duets. We both made solo records, sang with such quartets as the Edison Mixed Quartet, the Knickerbocker Male Quartet and in various kinds of chorus work, etc."

Since little is known nowadays concerning the organizations mentioned by Mr. Wheeler, I may say that the Edison Mixed Quartet, formed in the early 1900's, was at first composed of a Miss Chapel (her first name seems never to have been printed), soprano; Corinne Morgan (who, under her real name of Corinne Welsh, sang in the same church choir with Young and Wheeler), contralto; George M. Stricklett, tenor, and Frank C. Stanley, one of the greatest of all pioneer recording artists, bass. Anthony and Harrison came into it after Stanley's death in 1910. The Knickerbocker Quartet, formed in 1908, was originally Stricklett, second tenor; Anthony, first tenor; Harrison, baritone, and Gus Reed, bass. After Diamond Discs began to take place of Edison cylinders, Harvey Hindermeyer became second tenor and Donald Chalmers, bass.

Anthony and Harrison, or Young and Wheeler, as they were by this time better known, did little work together after 1912, when Mr. Young signed an exclusive Edison contract, while Mr. Wheeler elected to go on free-lancing and formed associations with other popular recording artists. Among these was the contralto, Elsie Baker, with whom he sang for both Victor and Columbia until Miss Baker, who later became a Victor Red Seal Star, signed an exclusive contract with that company. On popular song records they called themselves Edna Brown and James F. Harrison. In concert numbers, they were Baker and Wheeler.

Meditations of an Autograph Collector

IN RECENT ISSUES we have quoted from a book written more than 42 years ago by an autograph collector, Adrian H. Joline, for Harper and Brothers. The book was well named. Joline showed a fine knowledge of books and of history, a knowledge which he had enriched with his hobby. We quote briefly again from his comments and his letters.

"Even that cold-hearted, unimaginative person who sees in an autograph letter only a fragment of faded paper with irregular tracings of ink, and cannot comprehend the sensations of the collector when he realizes that he has before him the actual handiwork of the great man who made those tracings, will sometimes grant us the concession that there is a merit about a book which has 'associations.' I cannot explain why this is so; perhaps he thinks he could write a better letter himself, whereas he knows that he could not make a book, and the book has a tangible quality, a sort of solid reality about it which appeals to his materialistic nature. I find that I can always arouse a gleam of intelligence when I show this person such a book, while he will turn a dull, lack-lustre eye upon a precious letter of John Keats, or one of Alexander Pope, or even a page of Dean Swift or Samuel Johnson. In my own few volumes of this kind, there is a field for very pleasant meditation—pleasant, at least, to me. They are not many, and when I pore over some of those catalogues I sigh and envy.

"That faded morocco-bound cap-octavo is an English edition of Poe's Poems, edited by James Hannay; with no date in it, after the abominable custom of some English publishers: containing some of the most execrable of illustrations, including one of a wretchedly elongated being in a dressing-gown delivering an oration to an impossible crow perched on an incredible bust. But it has on a fly-leaf these lines: 'Given to Mrs. Benzon,—partly on account of the poetry, partly on that of the dedication at page 33, with all affectionate wishes of Robert Browning, March 7, 67.' The dedication on page 33 reads: 'To the noblest of her sex,—to the author of 'The Drama of Exile,'—to Miss Elizabeth Barret Barret, of England, I dedicate this volume, with the most enthusiastic admiration and with the most sincere esteem. E. A. P.' So we have the record of Browning's appreciation of our 'original genius,' the meteor who flashed so brightly and who fell so ignobly; and a loving memory of the woman whose name and fame are linked so closely with his own."

Almost simultaneously with these thoughts, author Joline quotes an autographed letter from Florence Nightingale, in which she declines to give her endorsement. She wrote:

July 28, 1890

"'My Dear Sir.—Many thanks for your most kind letter. I regret that, as you will perceive when I tell you that I have been an overworked invalid for more than 30 years and for many, many years almost entirely a prisoner to my rooms from illness, there is not the smallest chance of my being able to see your Balaclava charge, tho' there is nothing I should like better. I am very sorry, as you wish to have my name, that I must adhere to my poor old rule not to give it. But I am none the less deeply interested in your undertaking.—And I say God bless all my old comrades from the bottom of my heart. Pray believe me faithfully and hopefully yours, and wishing you the highest success.—Florence Nightingale.'"

BELLS

Bell Forum

In answer to Mrs. Cress's query, page 23, March HOBBIES, I have a brass bell three and one-half inches high to top of loop, with a three inch opening. It looks like cast brass. Below the top loop is a plain band.

The next band looks like large scroll leaves, and at one place looks like a dove. The next band, a plain one, is impressed Mathevs-Marcvs-Lvcas-Johannes.

The next band is a wide one showing what might be a child in swaddling clothes, a lion, a lamb, a bird, all separated by heavy leafy plants.

The next band is a plain one-half inch one around edge of bell. There are several holes in the casting where the metal has dropped out. The bell was given to us by a friend from Milwaukee who knew nothing about it.

There is so much detail on it that I thought it certainly must be a copy of some European bell and it resembles Mrs. Cress's.

Barnum Handshake Inspires Hobby

By A. MORTON SMITH

BRADLEY BARKER was only eight years of age when his grandfather, Andrew J. Sparks, then first deputy Collector of Internal Revenue in New York, took him down in the basement of old Madison Square Garden in the Spring of 1890 and introduced him to P. T. Barnum, the famous showman.

"Mr. Barnum unbuttoned his white kid glove to shake my hand," Barker recalls. "I'll never forget his huge diamond ring. He showed me the elephants and the menagerie, and I was delighted and thrilled."

The youngster was so impressed that he became an ardent circus fan and it has been more than 50 years since he has missed a performance of the circus in New York. Furthermore, his fine collection of circusiana, housed in the den of his apartment, was inspired by that meeting.

Barnum items are seen to predominate in the posters, photographs, programs and advertising matter that make up a large part of his hobby material.

Although Mr. Barker has never been in the circus business, his radio career is closely linked with the circus menagerie, for making animal sounds is his forte. When he steps into the menagerie tent of Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus, his imitations are accepted as the real thing by the lions and tigers, elephants and monkeys.

On the walls of his circus room are mounted heads of a lion, a tiger and a leopard, items that any circusiana collector would be proud to possess. Also on the walls are several colorful posters of the "golden age" of the circus and scores of photographs from his collection of 1,000, including famous stars of the sawdust arena dating from the days of Zazel, the woman who was shot out of a cannon more than 60 years ago, down to the current regime of Robert Ringling, former Grand Opera star, who is now managing director of the Ringling show.

Particularly impressive is Mr. Barker's photographic representation of circus blowdowns, fires, floods and railroad disasters going back to 1885, when Jumbo, the famous Barnum elephant, charged a locomotive at St. Thomas, Canada, and was killed. Along with pictures of Jumbo lying alongside the derailed engine, are views of the Walter L. Main Circus wreck at Tyrone, Pa., in 1893, when 16 cars were destroyed and five men killed, and graphic shots of the worst of all circus mishaps—the Haggenbeck-Wallace wreck at Ivanhoe, in 1918, when 85 members of the personnel were killed and 179 injured.

All the furnishings of his circus room are in keeping with the big top atmosphere. Unique indeed is the coffee table which is a bass drum over the head of which has been placed a glass cover. Thereon reposes an elephant figure with upturned trunk and there are other figures of animals placed at advantageous spots to catch the eye as one glances about the room.

His latest aquisition is a novel elephant foot ash tray. That the base is actually an elephant's foot is obvious by the wiry bristles which protrude from the leathery hide and the polished toenails.

One of the most interesting of Mr. Barker's circus items is a 16mm motion picture, entitled "The Big Show," which runs 40 minutes. He produced this picture in color, cutting his own sound recordings and personally supplying all the menagerie noises and other sound effects.

Making the movie came easy for him, since Mr. Barker spent 18 years in the motion picture field. He played the villain opposite such stars of silent picture days as Pearl White, Billie Burke, Marguerite Clark and Alice Joyce. With the coming of sound pictures, he turned director to do one of the earliest talkies, "Mother's Boy," with Morton Downey.

One day on a set involving a shipwreck on the Galapagos Islands, wherein seals figured prominently, Mr. Barker entertained members of the cast by barking like the finny creatures. The producer heard him and insisted he do the seal sound effects.

For 17 years since then, he has been doing animal sounds for the movies and radio. The jungle cries and growls in all of Frank Buck's Movies are Mr. Barker's. He uses no mechanical devices except a box resonator for cat animal's roars, depending upon his lips, tongue and hands to imitate the trumpeting of an elephant, the screaming of an eagle, or the barking of a dog.

Few radio listeners have not heard

DOLL-OLOGY

THE FUN OF RESTORATION

By LOTYS BENNING STEWART

FROM watching her father make wax figures when she was a girl, testing some of his formulas and remembering the different odors each had, Louise Brodeur, Indianapolis, has evolved her own system of restoring the most bedraggled old doll into something lovely and lovable. She even has made plaster paris molds for fashioning new legs to take the place of those which have been tugged at too hard by adoring little mammas.

She didn't like to play with dolls when she was a girl, but she has restored and collected them day and night since she left school—and every one of them is a personality to her. "I even find myself talking to them," she says.

She has acquired some treasures, many of them broken and torn, and has brought them back to their original beauty. There is the mannequin doll which is like an exquisite statue. It was sent from Paris by a designer, before the days of fashion magazines. It is made of French bisque and still has its original dress with cream lace skirt and turquoise bodice and embroidered petticoat, but she had to make the body over.

There is the Civil War doll (top of case, left) with the black snood on blonde hair, combs at the side of her face and a coronet of blue. The skirt of her dress is the original, of lace and cream satin, the blue top a part of the restoration work Miss Brodeur did, along with making new arms and legs.

There is the pre-Civil War doll (1852) of Parian (top of case, center) with a black snood on black hair in which each brush mark shows in the hairline. The feet and legs with their gay boots of the period are her design.

Then there is the bisque doll of about 1880 (top of case, right) with bisque blonde hair, blown glass eyes, pierced ears and a closed mouth. She too has been restored to her original beauty.

"No two dolls ever break the same, but the most common injury suffered is to the eyes," she said. "Next the elastic deteriorates and their arms and legs hang limp—usually the right ones. The more modern dolls check in heat and cold, and have to be given new skins, and many of them need new teeth and tongues, new hair, new eyelashes and parts of fingers and toes. Eyes have to be painted and waxed and replaced. One of the hardest tasks of restoration is where the neck has broken off just under the chin."

She has tried ten different glazes, sometimes works for half an hour to get the right shades of white for a particular doll—for some are green white, some blue, black, rose or yellow white — and they must match perfectly.

"Every doll has a story, but frequently it must be deduced from a study of costuming and hairdress, and from the way the body is put together," she said. "Dolls with flat bodies are usually very old."

The business of restoring doll's feet is a whole chapter in itself. The Civil War girl has high black shoes with gold buttons, white stockings and neat blue garters with fancy bows—painted on. There are the bittersweet shoes of bright red which look like the "can-can" girls, and the Godey legs with black or brown shoes and bow garters. Heels represent later periods.

One of the oldest dolls she has is a museum piece which was found through an archaeologist's excavation and dates to the fourth century. "When I got her the clothes fell to dust, but I have preserved and copied them," she said. "She wore trousers like the women of Jerusalem, but from her hair with the curls on the neck and the knot on top, I am sure she is Italian. Her body is made of wire covered with hemp. Her coat has a parchment lining. She looks like an old Italian painting—her terra cotta face is full of expression. She is a creche doll."

Perhaps the most beautiful doll head she has is one which dates to 1854—a blonde with a snood, and a halo matching the brilliant blue of her eyes. Among other old heads she has restored is one with a china head and spill curl headdress who came with a broken nose; a Parisian doll dating about 1860 whose head is tilted and has holes in the ears for earrings. Another has the flat headdress of the Civil War period and the wasp waist, and there is a Jenny Lind doll, of 1854, with black flat-top hair and a beautiful face. Many of the old dolls are bisque, some papier mache. And most of them are girls, although she has one boy doll she knows was made before 1894.

"Every doll has character—even the old battered ones are lovable," she said—as every little girl will agree, whether she is still in the pigtail stage or just a little girl at heart.

Miss Louise Brodeur, Indianapolis, enjoys restoring her dolls, almost as much as collecting them.

FOLK DOLLS

Bernis M. Cronkhite of National City, California, has donated four of her folk dolls to the Hobbies Museum. They are attractive additions to the doll collection and are greatly appreciated.

LIZA AND BILL

This is Liza and Bill, Costermongers from England, or people who sell fruit along the streets. They have wooden heads and must have proved to be very attractive to Queen Victoria, for it is said that dolls of this type started her famous collection of over a thousand dolls, which reposes in the London museum.

When Queen Victoria was a child she dressd 32 dolls herself and when she became queen she gave each of her ladies in waiting a doll in her own image.

BUTTONS IN PROSE AND POETRY

By DOROTHY FOSTER BROWN

THEY SAY a ruling passion is strong, as long as life endures. So a ruling hobby asserts itself, even when the hobbyist thinks he is far away from it. Proof of this lies in the fact that ever since I became interested in buttons, I have noticed even the slightest reference to them in stories. Whether I am reading "literature" or a mere murder mystery, I find myself alert to notice the magic word. And while buttons as clues are considered a little obvious nowadays, they are used occasionally (even in mystery stories) to round out a picturesque description or help create atmosphere.

Charles Dickens often mentioned buttons when describing the garments and general appearance of his characters, as was his admirable custom. (I wish more writers of his period had done the same!)

In "Kidnapped", by Robert Louis Stevenson, the hero, David Balfour, receives a silver button as a talisman from the bold Jacobite, Alan Breck. "Taking a knife from the table, he (Alan) cut me off one of the silver buttons from his coat. 'I had them,' he says, 'from my father, Duncan Stewart; and now give ye one of them to be a keepsake for this night's work. And wherever ye go and show that button, the friends of Alan Breck will come around you.'" In David's subsequent travels, the button did serve as a talisman, but what finally became of it, either he does not divulge or I don't recall. Maybe it is still safe and sound somewhere!

Mention of a silver button immediately brings to mind the old superstition that a witch could be killed only with a silver bullet. Several instances occur in fiction where, an actual silver bullet not being, handy, a silver button was crammed into a gun's muzzle and forced to serve the purpose. It was the silver that mattered, not its shape!

Buttons find a place in contemporary fiction, also. In "Ember Lane"*, by Sheila Kaye-Smith, the legendary highwayman, Dickory, is reputed to have worn a purple coat with "spade guinea" buttons. Spade guineas, coined in England during the years 1787-99, were so-called because they displayed a spade-shaped shield bearing arms on the reverse. Evidently coins were made into buttons many years ago, even as they sometimes are in these days.

"The Outsider"#, by Irene Cleaton, (a "costume" mystery of the eighteen twenties), contains the following:

"Lucetta rummaged through her clothes, making a confusion of them without Susan to help, and found a dark brown dress. She had no black and would not have worn it to please Jane if she had, but she was willing to make a less drastic concession. The brown had tiny buttons from the throat to the hem, and she discovered that Susan had left every one unfastened. Once in the dress she studied it in the mirror and decided she had forgotten how unbecoming it was, but she was too weary to march her fingers down the long row of buttons again." A few pages later, Lucetta recalls some of the elegancies of a London admirer, including his riding-coat with its "gold buttons lettered with his hunting-club initials."

I even found buttons mentioned in Agatha Christie's "Death Comes As the End"##, a mystery story of Egypt in 2000 B. C. They were used, however, to fasten the lid of a jewel box,—not on clothing!

"Being Met Together", Vaughan Wilkins' tale of adventure in the days of Napoleon, contains several references to buttons: one character remarks, "When I was eleven (c. 1753) I was taken off to a boarding school forty miles away. My mother—God rest her soul—put me into my best for the occasion. Plum-colored velvet coat with cut-steel buttons. Sprigged waistcoat....." etc. Unfortunately, he didn't say what kind of buttons adorned the waistcoat!

In 1806, the hero of the story rode on top of an English coach, next the coachman. "This professional gentleman was immensely fat, with a red face, crowned with a low, round hat, housed in a vast green overcoat with three capes, and pearl buttons the size of small saucers."

"Being Met Together" makes mention several times of dark blue coats with bright brass buttons,—a combination which was very popular over a long period of years. I have read somewhere that both Daniel Webster and Henry Clay were particularly addicted to blue coats with brass buttons. I like to think that perhaps one of our many plain "Gilts" was worn by "Black Dan" while he addressed the Senate, or conducted some hard-fought case in court.

The backs of these plain old buttons have always fascinated me; consequently, I'm well acquainted with such slogans as "Extra Superfine", "Rich Orange", "Double Gilt", "Imperial Standard", etc. So I felt as if I were meeting an old friend when I recently re-read Thomas Hood's punning poem, "Tim Turpin" (1827). This "pathetic ballad" tells us that

"Tim Turpin he was gravel-blind,
And ne'er had seen the skies;
For Nature, when his head was made,
Forgot to dot his eyes."

Tim married a lady "sight unseen"; then, after an operation had restored his vision, found her so unpleasing to his view that he murdered her and was duly hanged for the crime. But at his trial his conscience troubled him, so that he declaimed as follows:

"Said Tim unto those jurymen,
You need not waste your breath,
For I confess myself at once
The author of her death.
"And oh!—when I reflect upon
The blood that I have spilt,
Just like a button is my soul,
Inscribed with double guilt!"

I wish that I could remember all the references to buttons that I must have found in books in the past, before I was "button conscious". Such allusions are perpetual evidence of their prominence, and of the extent to which they have become part of every-day life and living. Customs alter, fashions change, but buttons—of some kind—are always with us. If writers in the past had realized that the buttons they took so casually for granted were to become a hobby of the future, they might have described them oftener and in greater detail. If such a course tended to slow down the action, at times, it could have correspondingly enlivened the "atmosphere". But for the help they have given us, we are grateful!

"Morning and Night"

By EMMA S. TYRELL

THE DESIGNS on this pair of buttons called "Morning and Night," are imitations of sculpture work. They are in copper applied to dark wood, possibly rosewood. They have their original loop shanks, yet at one time wire had been inserted in one tiny hole made in the wood to fasten the buttons together. They were found a number of years ago in a second hand store by a friend while she was touring the South searching for antique dolls.

The angel of morning carries a cherub holding a torch to light the world while she is scattering rose petals.

The angel of night carries two sleeping cherubs. A dove is seen near this angel in a picture at our library.

These designs were copied from sculptured work of Albert Bertel Thorwaldsen, a noted Danish sculptor who was born on a ship in 1770 and died in a theater while home on a visit in 1844. Among his works are the colossal lion at Lucerne, designed by him and executed by his pupils.

"CARAVELS"
Ancient and Historic

By GENEVRA GREEN

A LITTLE history of a button, representing an old time ship, long outmoded on the high sea! A classification of a stray button, found in a charitable institution where clothes had been given for the poor.

This is three times as wonderful as a fairy story, for it is true. Here is a dark button, about an inch and a half across, but with a wealth of history attached to its design, that of an ancient sailing ship. To be truthful we can go back to the great day that Columbus set sail for the "New World." Here were the three sailing ships, "The Nina", "The Pinta" and the very remarkable rebuilt ship once known as "The Gallega," but after remodeling was done, it took its place in the group that Columbus commanded as "The Santa Maria."

An old sailor, named Pinzon, helped very much in getting the ships ready to go, as he raised money and found others who were willing to add to the riches supplied by the Spanish sovereigns. Many adventuring seamen made up the crew, together with a surgeon and an English man and an Irish guide. But some were only men who had been laboring workers on farms in the provinces inland, some even coming from romantic old Castile itself.

When the dawn arrived on the great day they set sail, the crowds were huge. People streamed to the shore in the early light, as the east gave promise of a new day.

Columbus boarded his boat from a skiff. The sails were like white balloons against the blue waves and bluer skies as they stood out to sea. They left the harbor, and those left behind, some weeping in fear at the outcome of such a venturesome voyage as it seemed, and truly was, went back their familiar ways to wait and pray. These ships were known as "CARAVELS," ships of burden. They were strong enough to breast the waves of the stormy seas. and they bore many miles of ocean travel in the gales that strained every fiber of their construction. That row of ships met the horizon and disappeared from the familiar eyes of the friends on shore, and saw many obstructions to their ultimate goal before they finally came to rest safely in a harbor that opened up the "new World" forever to ensuing generations of mankind.

Let us not dismiss, too lightly, this tiny reminder of the glory of that deed, the founding of a new continent in looking at this small button-picture, one that resembles these early vessels. It is too easy to put off the research that history demands, in order to understand such an historic reminder. We may know that no longer any such frail craft embarks upon the voyage of unknown proportions, as these ancient caravels did, going out into the dim distance where the sea and sky join at the horizon rim.

Columbus might be a good title to give my little picture button, for his name is ever associated with the caravel ships. Or, we might call it a caravel button, and know that it represents the voyage of discovery. At any rate, we can know, when we look at it, that much is hidden in that tiny picture—of men's courage and ability in the face of every discouraging disaster and that we can take pride in the achievements of those far away days when the world was not so large and the ships were very tiny, yet the race was won, in spite of all hardships.

Look for more caravel buttons. Whether this one itself is new or old does not matter much. I know many plastic buttons are old. I have had some in my own possesion a good many years.

OUT OF THE BUTTON BOX

Button Topics

In extending hospitality to servicemen in our home, I notice they find considerable entertainment in my little "Playroom Museum," better known as our "Button Museum," since buttons predominate.

—o—

I had such an interesting thing happen recently. I have had buttons sent to me from many places where there are servicemen, but one of the most interesting experiences just occurred. An old house in Rhode Island was being cleaned and dismantled for occupancy by one of the Navy Officers, and one of the men happened to see him throwing out some old buttons. He asked for them for me, and said he was almost ashamed to give them to me, because they were so dirty, from their association with screws and old buckles from overalls, etc. Was I glad he did save them! I found among them 75 Revolutionary buttons and a few pre-1800.

One is pictured in Polly Crummet's Book "Button Collecting," page 94. It bears a star design. One of the larger ones has one of those etched designs, similar to one of those pictured in Button Classics from Edyth Doe's collection. There are many others that are just as interesting. I would appreciate it if anyone could give me dates on the following manufacturers: A. Matthews, L. H. & S. W. Ct., W Wallis, W. N. Scott and Porter, Lewis and Tomes, Merriman & Floyd-Waterbury, Weilingion, R. B. & Co., Haydens & Co., I. Ives, R & M.

Another pleasant experience I had recently was reading the book by Elinor Graham—"Our Way Down East." Any collector, especially a button collector will get a thrill out of that book. Mrs. Graham is a collector herself, and tells of such interesting personal experiences in such a sparkling way . . .

During this war I have developed another hobby, making scrapbooks for Servicemen.

I take a loose leaf binder about 10 by 11 inches, and cover it with a mannish pattern of chintz in a dark practical background. Inside the covers I paste a good looking picture of a pretty girl. In each book I put about 40 pages just filled with cartoons, funny and also some philosophical "pomes," short stories-clippings of quiz tests-or anything that will go to make it an Amusement Book. I cut the pictures with notched shears. I have made about 80 and sent them all over the world to Iceland, Australia, Italy, Pacific Islands, So. America, and many other places, including hospitals, etc. Because I get such appreciative letters it stimulates my interest to continue making them.

Grace R. Anthony, Massachusetts.

Ohio—I collect buttons, mostly historical, and want to tell you how much help HOBBIES has been in finding them. My most important ones are three Washington Inaugural buttons, all of which I got because of having HOBBIES. One, you sold to me, the Linked States pattern from the Hart duplicates. The other two were advertised in HOBBIES. Without it, I should not have had any of them. And I have found your advertisers to be very nice indeed to deal with.—Josephine Dewey.

The Tippecanoe County Historical Museum of Lafayette, featured a large display of buttons during April and May. The show was sponsored by the Lafayette Button Society, and their friends. Two beautiful collections of paperweights, belonging to Louis G. Buckle, and Mrs. Floyd Sense, were also shown.

Tillie Macgovern, president of the local button society, showed a Lafayette button. The original die was struck in 1824, when General de Lafayette visited America, and a set made of gold was presented to him. The die was used again in 1876, for the United States Centennial celebration. In 1916, another set was made from the die, and presented to a French delegation which visited America, and which included Count de Chambrun, great grandson of Lafayette.

The Harrison campaign buttons, made for the "Tippecanoe and Tyler Too" campaign of 1840 were of special interest to local residents.

The Jenny Lind buttons made to help promote the first American tour of this famous singer and presenting a likeness of her head, were included in the exhibit.

There was quite a collection of buttons in the form of the human hand, whose shape was said to have been prompted by the hands of Queen Victoria, always described as very beautiful.

There was also a Pocahontas button, one of a set made from silver dollars. Enameled buttons included some of the rare Limoges buttons showing a skater in 'conventional' attire. The painted porcelain buttons of the gay 90's recalled the shirtwaist popular in that period. Some beautiful Satsumas, and sulphide paperweights, along with beautifully mounted paperweights of all colors and designs, delighted the eye. Two old charm strings come in for their share of attention.

There was a very complete collection of insect buttons which fascinate all museum visitors, not to mention the large display of picture buttons illustrating scenes from mythology, fiction, romance, history, with animals, birds, men and women.

CALIFORNIA

The Oakland Button Club met recently at the home of one of the members in Castro Valley, Hayward. The Valley Button Club of Stockton were guests. Each member brought a box lunch, in which she had inserted a card with the name of the club and a collector's button. The boxes were exchanged, the cards judged and ribbon prizes awarded. Edith Weeks served as "quiz miss." The Oakland Club discusses a different type of button classification at each meeting.

The new officers of this club are: President, Jean Roger; Vice-President, Alice Case; Secretary, Lucy Schwarz; Treasurer, Edith Weeks.

NEW YORK

Verner E. Clum, was recently re-elected president of the New York State Button Society.

Other officers are: first vice-president, Alice Bishop; second vice-president, Mrs. Fred Young, and third vice-president, Mrs. Marguerite Maple; secretary, Mrs. Florence Ball, Ellenville; treasurer, Miss Bertha Green; directors — Mrs. Amity Quackenbush, Mrs. Margaret Winn; George Heindorf; Mrs. Ruby Darrohne, and Marjorie Merchant.

The Half Moon Button Club of Albany was host and displayed parts of the collection owned by its members. It included political campaign buttons dating back to the mid-19th century as well as carved pearl buttons, illustrating widely varied classifications.

Forty-six members attended the luncheon. The Albany Club turned in a 98% membership for 1945-46 season of the State Club.

Mrs. Howard C. Aberle, president of the Albany Club welcomed the visitors. George Shoemaker of Saratoga was Auctioneer.

MASSACHUSETTS

The Massachusetts State Button Society held its spring meeting, June 15, in Boston. Despite the fact that the heat record for that day was shattered, 20 dealers made reservations and there was a large attendance.

It was decided to forego a competitive exhibition of trays at this meeting, still there were many interesting cards and trays brought for examination. These ranged from diminutives to Colonials, George Washingtons, sporting buttons and unique wooden buttons.

There was no formal program, but the members were interested in having Mrs. Walter H. Parker of Brighton read a paper telling how and where she gathered her collection of wooden buttons. At the business meeting, discussion centered about the proposed changes in the Constitution and By-Laws of the National Button Society and the activities of the Juniors in the club.

Paperweights

Winfield Rutter of Millville, N. J., has sent HOBBIES an attractive sample of his Millville paperweight buttons. These buttons sell, according to size, from 60c to $1. They are all hand made, no two alike, although they can be had to match in colors.

Mr. Rutter is the last of the old glass blowers who worked in the Millville factory.

FAMOUS LINCOLN LOG CABIN

Its Mysterious Fate

By ELEANOR GRIDLEY

Part II

When Uncle John pointed to a farm house, some distance back from the highway and exclaimed, "That's Jim's place!" I was appeased and thankful. However, Uncle John's "hello" failed to arouse the inmates and I anticipated disappointment. Looking about, I espied down the road a short distance, two women who seemed to be interested in Mr. Hall's efforts. I signaled them. They faced about and approached us. Stating the nature of our errand I awaited anxiously the pleasure of the younger woman, who was apparently a relative of "Jim's." After some deliberation, the young woman said, "Wall grandpap and grandmarm aint no good. Ye can go in see em if ye want to."

The woman ushered us into a large room, cool and well furnished. The shades were drawn; the windows and door screened from flies that swarmed about the premises. The woman unlocked a door and we passed into the back room. What an unbelievable transportation scene was revealed!

It was a small dirty room, with the one window and the outside door wide open, through which flies and mosquitoes buzzed in and out. The back room contained an old iron stove, two rickety chairs, a broken table and a rumpled bed on which were lying two human bundles. One of the human bundles stirred and the other, half asleep, said, "Neow Sary lay still, I'll take care of ye—sho fly" and a feeble attempt was made to brush away the flies that were crawling over the woman's face.

Mr. Hall shouted, "Hey, Jim, I've brought a woman to see ye and Sary." Sary, dressed in a faded woolen gown, her feet in heavy socks, and a ragged woolen hood on her head seemed to understand. Looking at me, her dull and bleared eyes questioned my identity as she said, "Where's the baby?" Before I could reply to her question she added, "Did ye know Mandy's dead?" I answered in the negative and Sary mumbled, "Pore thing."

Famous Lincoln Log Cabin

The old man shading his eyes with his cupped hand and noticing me for the first time said, "Don't mind Sary, she's cracked. She won't hurt nobody." Again the old man tried to brush away the flies that were crawling in and out of pore Sary's open mouth. Failing in his purpose, the man excused his failure by saying, "Ben out hoing sweet taters fur the old woman, but the sun's so hot had to cave in; haint got no strength left to sho them blasted flies." Then in a voice soft and tender he said, "me and Sary ben married morin fifty years," and gently patting the woman's arm he added, "Sary's a good woman, but the boys went away, cept baby Jim. I guv him the farm and he promised but he didn't." Although his voice seemed to have reached the breaking point he shouted, "By the eternal God I'll stand by Sary tull the end. We're jest waiting, waiting, w-a-i-t-i-n-g."

Again the tired old man tried to brush away the crawling flies, but his trembling uplifted arm fell across the face of the woman who made no outcry. A hopeless expression flitted across the countenance of the tired old man. He closed his eyes and seemed to be sleeping profoundly.

What a disappointment! Our uncomfortable journey had brought no results, yet I lingered, and hoped the old man would waken. Suddenly and with a start he opened his eyes and looked surprised, but gave no indication of having seen me before and so recently. He looked at me steadily, quite some time, but did not speak. At last I concluded to break the silence, I asked, "Do you remember Abraham Lincoln?," and feverishly excited awaited his reply. Listening with strained attention I caught the old man's every word. "Yes," he said, "I knowd Abe-him and me split rails. Yes, I knowd Abe, I knowd his old pap, I knowd his old marm. Wall, he's quite a feller neow, ain't he?" I attempted to interrupt him—to remind him of Abraham Lincoln's tragic death, but most unexpectedly he blazed away, saying, "Them . . . rebel traiters, them . . . sneaking varmints killed Abe Lincoln." As suddenly and as unexpectedly as her husband's outbursts. "Pore Sary" sat up and greeted her fancied guest. "Howdy Abe," she said, "Glad tu see ye," and with a cackle she fell back on her husband's outstretched arm, who mumbled, "Pore Sary, I'll stand by ye tull the end."

Faithful unto the end! What loyalty, what devotion! Those two old helpless human wrecks—so cruelly, so wickedly, so wantonly neglected! Sobbing convulsively, I cried out in bitterness of spirit, "Oh, God why hast Thou forsaken them?

We closed the door softly and drove away. A woman standing beside the highway beckoned and Mr. Hall drew rein. It was the self-same woman who had led us into the cool pleasant "front-room," and who also indicated the "back-room." "I reckon," she said, "they didn't know much. Grandmarm's cracked, grandpap don't know nothing." "You are mistaken," I quickly replied. "From your grandfather's wonderful treasure box I have gathered jewels, rare and priceless. Your grandfather is wonderful, your grandmother, so frail and feeble, should be your especial care. To have been permitted to talk with them

ELEANOR GRIDLEY

This series of articles by Eleanor Gridley, well known Lincolniana author and collector, is published posthumously, through the courtesy of her daughter, Queen Thomas, Chicago. Mrs. Gridley was fast approaching the 100-year mark when she passed away a few months ago, and despite her advanced years, she maintained a deep interest in her hobby until her very last days. Her mind was keen and alert as she approached the century mark, adding further credence to the saying that "a hobby keeps one young."

Mrs. Gridley served the Chicago Columbian Exposition of 1893 in an official editorial capacity, which explains some of the background of this narrative.

Hobbies has made no attempt to streamline the story to make it conform to contemporary styles in journalism, preferring the charm and quaintness of the long ago.

is a privilege. I owe you a debt of graditude."

The woman was speechless and lest she recover her tongue I whispered to Uncle John, "Please drive on fast and furious."

Our return journey was made in silence, save now and then when Uncle John's solemnly uttered oaths cut into the stillness of the fragrant night and disturbed the brooding birds.

Time grew on apace—days lengthened into weeks and the daily influx of visitors increased. From the countryside, from near by villages, from far away towns they came. Verily, the old cabin had become a forum. Old and young came to pay homage to Abraham Lincoln. No monarch, however great, ever received more lavish encomiums, no conquering hero ever commanded more loyal subjects or claimed more zealous devotees.

The day was spent—darkening clouds massed in splendid state were slashed with rifts through which the evening sun poured rays of golden splendor, gilding the old cabin with a golden sheen. Twilight deepened, twittering birds were fast asleep in their leafy nests. Night was coming on and I had tarried at the cabin. I must bestir myself. I could scarcely discern the "cross-lot" path. To take the unfrequented roadside was venturesome. Miss Coleman had been gone sometime. I was alone. Wild panic fell upon me. In a paroxysm of terror I called for help.

An heretofore unobserved stranger was approaching. With a kindly voice he reassured me. I told him about the cabin and said, "Among the dwellers of this old cabin there was one of loyal lineage, but "The hewers of wood and drawers of water" knew him not as such. Continuing, I told him that one day this cabin dweller announced his leaving, and from this selfsame cabin home that dweller went forth to seek and find his heart's desire, power and achievement.

The man of kindly voice and gentle presence who sat beside me was saying, "Abraham Lincoln was my friend. Every year and often twice a year—from eighteen hundred thirty-one to eighteen hundred sixty-one, a period of thirty years, Abraham Lincoln came to this cabin home and often stayed several days. He told me that duty forced him to return to meet the interest on money he had borrowed for his father's benefit. But, that most especially he came to pay a debt of gratitude to his kind stepmother, who cared for him in his boyhood and loved him as her very own."

Suddenly and clearly I seemed to hear bells ringing—announcing the coming of a great personage. And, so I told the stranger and said "For what are they ringing?" "For the President-Elect Abraham Lincoln," he replied and then proceeded to tell me of that great occasion.

"In February, eighteen hundred sixty-one," he said "a few days before his departure for Washington, Abraham Lincoln came to bid his stepmother farewell. The cabin was vacant and the doors closed. I am sure his heart skipped a beat. With tears in his eyes he inquired, 'Where is mother?' He was told she had been taken to a neighbor's as the chimney needed considerable repairing."

"Did he go into the cabin?" I asked. "Alone, he entered—closed the door and remained apart for a while," the man replied.

The present moment vanished. The curtain that concealed the long ago was drawn aside and again I was permitted to view a psychic panorama's dissolving scenes.

It was the dreaming mother's boy to tall manhood grown, who paced the cabin rooms. That tall, gaunt figure passed from one cheerless room to another more cheerless. With a sweeping glance of his sad eyes, he encircled the narrow confines of the familiar old log cabin. With a single gesture of his hand he measured the distance, from rough hewn floor to rafters—grimy and stained. Speaking to himself, he said, "More years of my life, than otherwise, these cabin homes have been my abiding place. Today, after years of storm and stress—years of toil, years of buffeting the waves of adversity, years of striving to surmount obstacles that beset my path, years of doubt, of perplexity, of uncertainty"—Then he paused, his eyes filled with tears, and he continued, "Today—today my dreaming mother's 'Marble Halls' await my coming. How strange is fate," he murmured. The tall man bowed his head. The vision vanished. I scanned the face of the stranger.

The kindly man, sitting beside me on the doorstep, did not appear to have noticed my abstraction, as many call the visualized retrospection. Without, apparently, any intermission, the stranger continued his recital. "As Mr. Lincoln came out of the cabin, someone in the crowd that stood about, called out, 'Hello Abe, ye got to be President—jest as Grandmarm Lincoln said ye orter. She said ye desarved it.' Mr. Lincoln spied the speaker, an old neighbor, and replied, 'I shall strive to deserve the honor the people have bestowed upon me,' Hesitating a moment, he finished, 'I may live to regret it.'

"To the friends who had accompanied him from Charleston, the nearest railway station, Mr. Lincoln said, 'I am going to see my kind old stepmother if she is at Farmington."

"The President-Elect and his personal party, escorted by the excited gathering hastened to the little burg where the greeting and sad farewell were spoken. This event has been told and retold so often I shall not rehearse the stranger's account.

Twilight was disappearing and I dreaded the lonely walk that lay between the cabin and the cottage. To contemplate it was unbearable. In attempting to express my appreciation for so agreeable a season of reminiscences, my voice broke. The stranger interrupting said, "Please allow me to see you safely home." Greatly relieved I accepted the courteous offer and we took the country road.

Mr. Hall had planned another and a greater surprise. "To-morrer," he said, "We'll go to Paris to see Uncle Dennis Hanks."

DRESDEN CHINA

By LARRY FREEMAN

IT MAY seem a long ways between the making of gold and of Dresden China, but that is how it all started. Johan Friedrich Bottger, who developed the chinaware, was an early alchemist who had already tried many formulas in an attempt to turn base metal into gold. He had been living on the bounty of a Prince in Berlin, and this gentleman finally tired of supporting the unsuccessful experiments. Fleeing from Berlin, Bottger was given another opportunity by Augustus, the Elector of Hanover. No gold came out of the new mixtures; but in 1707 Bottger did produce a red stoneware resembling a Chinese product then held in high esteem. The invention interested Augustus, and Bottger was encouraged to continue his experiments in the making of china. Now came the discovery that the white earth near Aue in Saxony was pure kaolin, and with this Bottger perfected a white porcelain in 1709. Augustus sensed the importance of a product that could finally compete with Canton China. The factory was moved from Dresden to the castle of Albrechtsburg in Meissen and established under royal patronage in 1710. A peculiar AR marking was used in this early period.

In another ten years, Bottger was dead and his place taken by Johann Herold, a master china painter imported from Vienna. Thus began the period of elaborate decoration, strongly showing the chinese influence. Oriental designs in heavy gold were used on the white background and a 'dragon' border was very popular. Meissen yellow was first used in about 1725, and other delicate tints began to appear on desert and coffee services at this time. Under the guidance of Herold, French artists were imported for scene painting, thus setting a style which was soon to be taken up by Sevres. China of this period 1720-30) is usually marked with a peculiar mark showing double crossed swords This was taken from the arms of Saxony. The third Meissen period coincides with the arrival in 1731 of a third "Johann," a sculptor by the name of Kandler. He was originally brought in to model the porcelain figures for the Japanese Palace in Dresden, and so successful was his work that he remained to take over the virtual management of the factory.

To Kandler we owe the creation of those delightful little statuettes that are now synonymous with Dresden and which were so widely copied in cruder form by the Staffordshire potteries of England. Even the dinner services began to take on an originality of form and decoration. Porcelain flowers became an important item of manufacture and were applied lavishly to the decoration of vases, candlesticks, mirror frames, and clock cases. Besides the famous Dresden china shepherdesses of Kandler, there now appeared dogs and other animals modelled by Kirchner and, the more delicate lace figures of the sculptor Acier, who was brought in from Paris around 1765. Work continued in the specialization of figurines throughout the remainder of the century. The china mark adopted in 1796 was a single pair of crossed swords with an asterisk underneath.

During the 19th century, Dresden turned out great quantities of dinner services, and it was in the latter part of this century when so much of the 'onion' pattern found its way into America. The single crossed swords mark in blue was now standard, and after 1893, most of the importation were also marked with their place of origin, Germany.

The Meissen factory always had its imitators, and around the turn of the last century, these were as numerous in Germany as outside. It is for this reason that markings are regarded as so important. It is something to recall that no European pottery has been in existence as long as has Meissen. It was founded before Sevres in France or the famous English potteries of Staffordshire. For over two hundred years it has been in continuous existence. Just before the war there was a revival in making the old figurines of the 1750 period. Many of these were imported by America for sale in the better gift shops. There is no knowing what the future may hold for the pottery established by Johann Friedrich Bottger as the indirect result of his search for gold.

L. R. Schumann of Boston claims to have the largest mustache cup collection in the country. He has two left handed cups and another even more unique inasmuch as it has a removable bridge that the user can insert in an ordinary cup to protect his mustache. This was made for the traveling gentry.

ABC plates and Franklin mugs from the collection of Robert L. McLaughlin, 15-year old Ohio collector.

ABC PLATES AND FRANKLIN MUGS

THE ABC PLATES and Franklin maxims mugs collection shown here, proves that the young collector is just as zealous as the oldster when it comes to adding specimens to a collection.

"I started my collection at the age of six with a very small china mug of no great value other than I had bid on it at an antique sale and was fortunate enough to be the buyer. My mother and grandmother, being dealers in antiques, encouraged my buying of mugs and plates at all sales we attended or wherever we happened to find them. Hence I still find myself looking and inquiring for specimens which I do not have. My collection now consists of more than 250 pieces, and I am very proud of them. Several have been given to me by friends and dealers, the balance have been purchased throughout the Eastern part of the United States. Among them are various types of ware, mostly Leeds ware. The mug I am holding in my hand is a Leed's mug with pink lustre decoration which formerly belonged to the famous movie actress, Marie Dressler; she too was a mug collector. In the cupboard are ABC plates such as: 'The Barefoot Boy,' 'Lincoln the Rail Splitter,' 'Indians Candle Fishing,' 'Ship Constitution,' 'The Arrival of General McClelland,' 'Babes in the Woods,' many with Franklin's Proverbs, some historical, sporting series, religious verses and many others with quaint inscriptions.

"The mugs consist of pink and copper lustre, Leeds, Pennsylvania pottery, Bohemian, ABC mugs, and the majority of them are Franklin Maxims."

"The mugs pictured in front of these plates are as follows: (1) Marie Dressler's mug, (2) very gaudy coloring (Salopian), (3) Leeds pink lustre with poem of December, (4) Miniature mug of block tin, (5) Franklin Maxim, (6) Waiter Craving Charity, (7) yellow lustre with alphabet, (8) Robert Raikes, Founder of Sunday Schools, (9) Dr. Franklin's "Poor Richard," (10) Pink Spatter with Peafowl, (11) Independence, (12) Grandmammas Tales, (13) Copper lustre with rough colored band, (14) Pink lustre with house decoration.

"I have many others which I can not mention but they are just as interesting as these I have told you about. They are all genuine antiques except two mugs, one with picture of Dionne Quintuplets and the other is the picture of King Edward VIII, the uncrowned King.

These two, although new are just as interesting to me as the stories behind the old ones, for in years to come these will be historical and some young man like me will be searching for them."

THEY WERE COTTAGE ORNAMENTS

By FRANK FARRINGTON

Illustrations from the collection of Mrs. Walter K. Whitley, Elmira, N. Y.

MADE to appeal to the occupants of tidy little English cottages, hundred of figures, many very simple and humble in design, some quite elaborate, were produced in the latter half of the 18th century. Those that survived the hazards of breakage and loss have endured to become prized family possessions, treasured as heirlooms, or to become the property of collectors. Many were brought to America to serve as reminders of the "old country" as long as the family continued its line of descent.

Wherever made these figures have come to be called Staffordshire though in fact Staffordshire covered only the ten miles of pottery district where were located the earthenware works of Hanley, Stoke-on-Trent, Fenton, Etruria, Lane-End, Shelton, Longport, Cobridge, Tunstall and Burslem. Similar products were made at Bristol, Daughley, Fulham, Leeds, Liverpool, Newcastle, Sunderland and Swansea.

A better grade of figures comprised the porcelain product made at Chelsea, Bow, Derby, Plymouth. One William Duesbury, owner of the Derby, established in 1756, purchased the Chelsea works in 1769 and the Bow works in 1776. Hence for a time there were Derby-Chelsea and Chelsea-Derby pieces. The figures made under Duesbury were unexcelled by any others in richness of color and design. Too, they were enhanced by a greater artistry of the bocage or boscage (the leafy background or bower effect around the figures). Large numbers of the most beautiful figures were turned out by these potteries, whose chief competitor was the Worcester pottery, making almost as fine wares and showing a frequent similarity due to the fact that workmen often changed from one pottery to the other, carrying ideas with them.

Derby employed the best of the period's painters, of whom one was William Billingsley (calling himself "Beeley") but even Billingsley shifted about from one pottery to another, carrying his designs with him, in his head if not otherwise. One authority has declared, referring to the Derby figures, "They show a degree of excellence unapproached by any kindred productions."

Unfortunately it is almost impossible for any save the most experienced of collectors to identify the product of any one pottery, and the best judges are often at fault in their decisions. Without going fully into the matter of earthenware pottery glazed and colored, (as Staffordshire); hard paste porcelain made with natural kaolin clay (produced in England only at Plymouth, Bristol and Liverpool); and soft paste porcelain made with artificial clay compounds (at Bow, Derby, Chelsea, Worcester and Rockingham); one cannot differentiate between the products of different potteries. And, to tell the truth, learning to know one from another by the "feel" is very difficult. It is too much to expect of any amateur that such expert knowledge can be acquired without long experience.

For most of us it is enough to leave such technicalities to those who have the time and the inclination to go deep into details of the pottery industry.

The method of making in most potteries, referring to figures, was with a mould. The body of the figure was made in the mould. The head, arms, legs and any extraneous parts were made and attached separately by a workman called a "repairer," and the coloring was applied, the object then glazed—or sometimes the coloring was applied after the glazing, particularly in the case of the favorite colors, pink, the typical popular apple-green, and brilliant orange. Most Staffordshire figures have a small hole somewhere in them and some are open at the base and hollow.

Different potteries featured different points. As, for example, Derby figures led in the beauty of color and with an exceptionally fine gold adorning. Chelsea was unexcelled in the beauty and variety of its bird figures. Bow produced outstanding bocage backgrounds.

Pairs of statuettes were favorites, the commonest being a young man for one and a young woman for the other. The young man often carried a basket of fruit and the girl a basket or an apron full of flowers. The young man might be a hunter and the girl a grape bearer. Either might be accompanied by a dog. Dogs were often added to give more action. One figure might represent summer and the other, winter, or there might be spring and autumn. Pairs of musicians, pairs as milkmaid and dairyman, pairs of humanized animals. One set of four figures represents, separately, a bear playing a 'cello, an ape with a flute, a dog with a fiddle and a lion with a minstrel's "bones."

Right: Large box with beautiful coloring and lustre.

Center, right: Trinket box that belonged to an aunt of George Washington.

Left: Staffordshire inkwell in beautiful coloring. Two cargo boxes are for ink and sand.

Three beautiful pieces of what appears to be unmarked English parian, 9½ and 15 inches tall.

A set of four Chelsea pieces represents Africa with a black boy and a white lion; Europe, girl with a cornucopia of flowers at her feet and wearing a crown; Asia, a boy beside a reclining dromedary; America, an Indian standing on an alligator. Cupids are common and Chelsea showed a set of four seasons figures; spring, girl with basket of flowers and a cupid; summer, a girl with a sheaf of wheat and a cupid; autumn, a youth garlanded by grape vines and standing by a wine barrel, with an infant satyr; winter, an old man standing by a brazier with a cupid chopping wood.

Many attractive little house figures were made in Staffordshire, very decorative cottages with bits of "moss" attached, some of these figures being slotted for use as banks.

All potteries seem to have found dog figures popular and there appeared spotted coach dogs, slender greyhounds, pugs, poodles and pointers, smooth, sleek dogs and shaggy dogs. Of all sizes, alone and with human figures, made for tops to inkwells and trinket boxes.

Some large Staffordshire dogs of the typical black and white, long haired sort stand six, eight and ten inches high, sitting position. Some are on their four feet. Many of these have been copied in modern china. It was a hundred years after the height of the Staffordshire cottage ornament production that Bennington, Vermont, in the 1840's and 1850's made Bennington dogs and various other figures, imitating as they best could, the work of the English. During the same later period, as well as earlier, German, French, Dutch and Copenhagen potters were making ornaments. Some of the Meissen (Dresden), Saxe and Berlin figures being of great beauty.

In Staffordshire figures pairs of salt and pepper shakers were made in great variety and in large numbers. Moore puts the number of different patterns up in the thousands. Many are unique, some are charming, others are commonplace, all are worth having.

The colorful patterns of the Scotch tartans led to the making of many, many Staffordshire figures in kilts, though why even Staffordshire's pattern makers should have chosen kilts for the garb of the "Lion Slayers" in a pair of important twelve-inch figures, is hard to guess.

Historical figures by various potters represented prominent men of contemporary and earlier days: Benjamin Franklin, Lord Cambden, Sir Charles Napier, Lord Nelson, Charles I and his Queen, Henrietta Maria, Napoleon, George II and a long list of others.

Chelsea made figures as near to perfection as any could be. Such pieces, for example, as "The Music Lesson," with the shepherdess and her lambs seated before a beautiful bit of bocage, while the young shepherd boy beside her, his arm around her neck, is teaching her to play upon his pipe, are marvels of workmanship. From the same pottery came a Shakespeare modelled from his monument in Westminster Abbey, while Shakespearean and other fictional characters, together with mythological gods and goddesses appeared in numbers.

Similar subjects came from other potteries. Bristol featured the "Four Seasons" and the "Four Elements." Bow reproduced the actress, Kitty Clive and the actor, Woodward, both popular in the early 18th century, in a pair of figures, specimens of which have always been highly valued. Plymouth turned out birds and animals, singly and in groups as well as a notable fictional "Harlequin." Shepherds and milkmaids were common in all potters' lists.

The further one goes in seeking information about cottage ornaments, the plainer it is that, though only a side feature in the potters' production, the volume of figures marketed was very large, large enough and seemingly important enough to have resulted in a greater volume of descriptive literature.

DO YOU LIKE GLASS?

Do or Would You Like to Collect It? — Then Why Not?

Buy pieces which represent the craftsmanship of the Glass Blower—Glass blown in early American Glass houses before the Industry became a mechanized quantity production proposition. If you want a table setting in pressed glass why not one of the early patterns when fine ringing lead or flint glass was used, before the cheap lime glass substitute was introduced.

OUR STOCK

of 18th and early and mid-19th century blown glass includes pieces of Stiegel type, examples from the South Jersey, Ohio and other Midwestern, New York and New England Glass houses. Many of these are special off-hand pieces made by individual blowers. We also have a fine stock of Blown Three Mold glass. We can supply fine examples representing craftsmanship, not mass machine production at a price range from $5.00 to $30.00. Also rarer and more expensive pieces for the advanced collector. Many collectors do not realize that early blown glass can be acquired at no greater cost than present prices paid for cheap machine made products of the 1880-1920 era.

Pressed Table Ware

We always have a nice stock in such patterns as Ashburton, Early Thumbprint, Horn of Plenty, New England Pineapple, Ribbed Bellflower, Ribbed Ivy, Cable, Ribbed Palm, Inverted Fern, Early Honeycomb (a lovely pattern and inexpensive), Argus, Magnet and Grape with Frosted Leaf and others.

Cover

The two beautiful cabinets illustrated on the cover of this issue are fitting repositories for the choice pieces of Dresden, Chelsea and Meissen which David E. Chatelaine prizes.

Catalogs Collections

J. C. Weller of Elyria, Ohio, makes history his hobby, and in connection with his research, he keeps thousands of 3x5" cards depicting every possible subject. There is no form of collecting that he does not cover in his interesting research work. He uses a photographic reproduction process to reduce his material to exact size. His sections on Lincolniana and on the Civil War are particularly interesting. Personalities such as Mark Twain's are well illustrated.

Mr. Weller thinks that every hobbiest should start files of this kind. They are compact and carry a tremendous lot of information on any particular subject in which a hobbiest is interested.

Antiquer Held For Theft

A man who was recently taken into custody in Scribner's bookshop, on Fifth Ave., New York City, when a clerk said he removed a book from the counter and slipped it into his trousers, was arrested on a charge of grand larceny, according to the New York Sun, after a search of his furnished room at 350 East 50th street and his person revealed that he was a collector of rare china.

The suspect was identified as Harry Francis Burke, 27 years old, of 21 North Mason avenue, Chicago, a salesman. The police said the book taken from the store was about Van Gogh, the painter, and that two Dutch plates, valued at $75 each, were also hidden in Burke's clothing. According to the police he admitted having removed valuable china and antiques from various stores in New York City.

Price tags found in his room indicated that he had at one time an 1850 dessert dish from the J. P. Morgan collection, valued at $450. The police said he also had stored several barrels of the merchandise in warehouses. It was his practice, according to the police, to carry a suitcase filled with torn newspapers and, when clerks were not looking, to throw a dish into the bag. The police said that he sold several items to Alfred Rich of 122 East 57th street, who was unaware that they were stolen, but who was given a summons for failing to keep proper books.

Unwanted Visitors Bother Old Homes

HOBBIES tries to keep down the use of box numbers in advertising. One woman explained why she wanted to use a box number in an interesting fashion, as follows:

"I will explain why I wish to use this box number instead of my house address. I am a widow, and my home is large and locally known to contain several collections of antiques. I have been bothered exceedingly by total strangers trying to gain admission. It has proved dangerous for me in several ways.

"My husband died recently and under the advice of my family doctor and also my lawyers, I myself have been going over my collections and listing same and selling the things suitable in the advertisements inserted in your magazine. I do not run a shop, nor am I physically able to do so. I have no facilities for showing things as in a shop. However, it has proved most satisfactory to sell by mail in my own way and at my own convenience. Every answer to the HOBBIES ads has been answered by me direct with my own letterhead and address. That is all right, but it is not practicable or desirable to have total strangers coming here, and that is out of the question.

"I had a most unpleasant experience a short time ago. I was sick in bed. Two women called and told my maid at the door, when she asked their names, that they were from out of town, had no cards, and were old friends of mine. She told them I was indisposed. They then asked if they could come in and see me for just a few minutes. When she came up with the message, I slipped on a dressing gown and came slowly down the stairway which is carpeted so that I made no sound. I paused on the stairway to look into the mirror which gave full view of the living room. I had never seen either woman before. One was stepping off, one foot in front of the other, the width of the room from fireplace to French doors. The other was rummaging and pushing about the papers of my desk.

"To make a long story short, I was scared to death. Their stories were conflicting, and I had the police called. They got into their car and tried to get away, but the police got them. It then appeared that they had driven into town, gone straight to a hotel, and there did not register but asked for my residence and all about me of the hotel clerk.

"The police called the chiefs of police of the two towns they said they came from, and verified their statements as to who they were and what they were up to. Finally, they let them go, but told them to get out of town immediately.

"It seems one of them had attended a talk on period houses in Illinois. The speaker, the head of a large lumber concern, had mentioned this house as an example of pure Georgian and had also spoken of the antiques and collections inside. The two ladies had determined to get into the house, they said, and had driven here with that purpose in mind. They said they had been told it would be impossible, but they had hit on this scheme. At any rate, they surely put me back to bed in earnest with a real attack of nerves. Also, this winter an attempt was made to enter the house. Thanks to the cooperation of State Police, the four young hoodlums were all caught. Enough has happened to convince me that I do not want the danger of strangers coming here through ads."

The Publisher's Page

YOUR good paper this month went where your meat and other necessities went, to France, Russia, China and points east and west. You got what was left.

—o—

It's a good thing it is summer, because you get your HOBBIES this month without a coat. You got one last year, that one with the old print of the early steamboat, but if anyone noticed it, we never got a chirp.

—o—

The fact is, we could not buy a pound of cover paper anywhere in the market, and we had about made up our minds that we would have to publish HOBBIES without a cover for the duration. Since printing the first form, however, we have secured enough cover paper for four months, so you will get a nice cover in colors for the balance of the current year. Also your regular good paper.

—o—

The Publishers Association also thinks and anticipates that we will get a 5% increase in magazine paper the third quarter of the year so that we will be able to take on some more subscribers. If any of your friends have been waiting, tell them they can send their subscriptions now. This improved condition is brought about by the fact that Europe is getting its pulp from Sweden so that we are not having to ship so much out to supply other countries. Besides this, some war prisoners have been put to work cutting wood for paper pulp, and this has relieved us some.

—o—

The only way we have been able to keep up the regular size magazine without cutting down the number of pages is by taking our book paper allowance in magazine paper. We put ourselves out of the book publishing business for the current year in doing so. Outside of a few reprints, we have not been able to publish any books, although we have had some splendid manuscripts that would sell readily. However, we thought the magazine was serving best, and that the books could be better postponed.

—o—

When you have your HOBBIES bound you then realize what an enormous book you get for $2.50. True the advertisers help to pay for it. People have occasionally asked us why we do not raise our subscription price and use the money to eliminate as much grief as possible. There are a number of phases to that. First of all as a matter of policy, we want to keep HOBBIES in the popular class as was the original idea back of it. While we could get more for it now, there would be the grief of putting the price down when the inevitable slump hits. It is surprising how many people voluntarily sent us $3 for renewal, as if hinting that we ought to put the price up and they are willing to pay their share. We invariably extend these subscriptions fourteen months instead of twelve. However, we appreciate the spirit just the same.

—o—

We have not been sure how long we could keep the price at $2.50. The last lot of paper that we bought to wrap your magazine in cost us 12c a pound. The standard price of good kraft wrapping paper is 5c a pound. We have had a very square deal on our regular supply of magazine stock, but in many lines we have been, as you all know, often unmerifully overcharged. After the European war, many thought the end was near, and they proceeded to disregard all ceilings and all conscience and exact what the traffic would bear. On supplies out of the ordinary, such as repairs, etc., we are, in most cases, greatly over-charged.

—o—

Our greatest grief, however, has been in securing competent help. Our friends say, "Raise your price and go out in the market and get the best people, regardless of salary." We cannot do that. We don't dare take people away from war industries, and Chicago has been chuck full of war industries. It seems like every little factory has a sub-contract. In the printing trade a great deal of Government printing was thrown into this vicinity. War industries could take our help with impunity, but we were not allowed to hire anyone away from a war industry. Besides, as a matter of principle we do not believe in pirating help and lending ourselves to a vicious circle of each employer paying more than the other until the value of the dollar gets to be a joke. However, the lot of a fellow running a private business during the war has not been envious.

In some respects, things are easing up. In other respects, they are getting worse. The only relief can come by the Government itself, in not buying so much paper and storing it, just as they have been forced to quit buying so much meat. If they do not get along with less, they will break down the economic system of the country. The Government is over-staffed with help, and they permit the war industries to over-staff on the vicious cost-plus system.

—o—

The Jap war is going to last at least two years. It took us three and a half years to get ready for the European invasion. We have a much tougher task in the Jap invasion. We have no nearby bases with friendly people at our backs, as we had in England. We have no Russian army of seven or eight million men on another front. We have three times as far to transport our men and supplies. We have a much longer body of water to cross from our nearest bases than we had on the twenty-two mile English channel.

—o—

Occasionally we get a complaint that we are not printing as much news as formerly and that the magazine is heavy with advertising. It is quite fortunate that the volume of advertising has increased or we would not be publishing HOBBIES today. The increased volume of advertising has enabled us to meet these extra expenses.

Otherwise, we would have to take some of that foreign propaganda money that is being spent in this country. The newspapers and the halls of Congress have echoed lately with discussion of the thirteen million dollars England, France and Russia have recently spent for propaganda in this country. Most of it, it is charged, went to magazines who published certain articles that you readers thought were a discussion of our public questions. We never got any of it.

It may come out some day how much was spent before the war to get us into it. One newspaper and magazine after another suddenly changed its policy from peace to war. Whether this propaganda money had anything to do with it, the public can best judge. It is all a sad commentary on the integrity of the public press of the country.

We have heard a lot about the freedom of the press as one of the four cardinal principles for which we are fighting. We printed some bold editorials, and a great many people who believed the political propaganda put out about freedom of the press wondered how we could print that stuff. If you believed what they said about freedom of the press, why did you wonder why we still had freedom of the press? Some day I am going to write a story on this page and tell you of the various persecutions I went through at the hands of New Deal politicians after I wrote those editorials. If you think I didn't pay for them, you have another guess coming.

Maybe I was sore because I didn't get some of that easy propaganda money. Maybe I should have sold out.

Question: What would be your price to sell out?

Answer: 914 quintillion, 783 quadrillion, 610 trillion, 472 billion, 516 million, 900 thousand pounds and 2 shillings.

Question: What are the 2 shillings for?

Answer: To get a drink of scotch.

STAMPS

News from WASHINGTON

FOLLOWING the announcement of Postmaster General Frank C. Walker of the issuance on July 11, of a special postage stamp commemorating achievements of the United States Marines in the present World War, definite steps were taken to honor all branches of our Armed Services in such manner—the Army, Navy, Coast Guard and Maritime Service.

A meeting was held in the office of Joseph J. Lawler, Third Assistant Postmaster General, at which representatives of the Secretaries of War and Navy were present, in addition to Alvin W. Hall, Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and his chief of the Division of Printing, Donald McLeod. Captain Edwin J. Steichen appeared for the Secretary of the Navy, while Lieutenant Colonel Harold F. Ambrose, and Arthur DuBois represented the Secretary of War. In addition to Mr. Lawler, Roy M. North, Deputy Third Assistant Postmaster General, and Robert E. Fellers, Chief of the Stamp Division, spoke for the Post Office Department.

Representatives of the War and Navy Departments were requested by Mr. Lawler to submit designs for possible use on stamps for these two Services and they agreed to do so.

It is the present plan to issue these postage stamps commemorating the heroic deeds of the several Armed Services, beginning with the one for the Army, some date in September. Then will follow the stamp for the Navy in October. A stamp for the Coast Guard and one for the Merchant Marine will complete the series. Dates and places for first day sales of these stamps will be announced later.

—o—

The 1-cent stamp of the Roosevelt Memorial Series was first placed on sale at Hyde Park, New York, on July 26, and the 2-cent stamp of this Series was scheduled to be placed on first-day sale at Warm Springs, Georgia, on August 24.

The central design of the 1-cent stamps consists of a photograph of President Roosevelt on the left and a reproduction of his ancestral home at Hyde Park on the right. The same photograph of President Roosevelt is to appear on the left in the design of the 2-cent stamp, with a reprodution of the "Little White House," at Warm Springs on the right.

Stamp collectors desiring first-day cancelations of the 2-cent Roosevelt stamp may send not in excess of 10 addressed envelopes, accompanied with remittance for the stamps to be affixed, to the Postmaster, Warm Springs, Georgia, in time for servicing.

To obtain the special first-day postmark, collectors must allow for the affixing of two of the 2-cent stamps, to each first-day cover.

In response to popular demand for a stamp commemorating the achievements of the United States Marines in the present World War, such a stamp was first placed on sale at Washington, D. C., on July 11.

The first suggestion for the issuance of this stamp came from Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming.

The central design of the stamp depicts the striking photograph made by Joseph Rosenthal, Associated Press photographer, which illustrates the raising of the American flag on Mt. Suribachi, on the island of Iwo Jima.

One of the most popular groups of precancels at this time is that of the overrun countries or "flag" precancels as usually they are called. These make an interesting, beautiful and colorful collection.

Something over 500 varieties of these stamps now are known to be existent. In the past commemorative precancels have not appreciated much in value. In fact, for the most part, they have decreased. Especially has this proven true of the Black Hardings issue in 1923 and the Washington Bicentennial issue of 1932.

We notice a number of men we consider mighty smart in precancel matters are making collections of the precanceled stamps of the overrun countries so it is just possible that this issue wil prove to be different from an investment point of view than previous commemorative and memorial issues.

—o—

Probably there will be no convention of the Precancel stamp Society this year since conventions of over fifty people have been banned by the Office of War Mobilization and of Defense Transportation. Well, there should be some regional meetings anyhow that collectors can attend. Anyhow we can buy and trade precancels by mail.

—o—

Limited mail service has been resumed between the United States and Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, parts of Poland, and Bessarabia, part of northern Bukovina, and localities in Moldavia.

IT SEEMS TO ME

By FRANK L. COES

Regarding Color

The collecting public is sort of upset about the announced "mourning" issue, which maybe is the wrong word.

The greater portion of my letters seem to feel that the issue should be bi-colored (the portrait in black) and that it definitely should be "better than the run of mine stuff the Bureau has printed," and, from Southern friends, the top criticism is "bi-color, good enough to keep, and as good in philatelic requirements of print, perforation and exactness as the Flag issues."

Our first mourning was black, for Lincoln. The Wilson was black but of 17 cent value. The McKinley was black instead of red and maybe an infraction of the U.P.U. agreement. But a bi-colored series surely would give something that would be much better than the issues styled "run of mine."

Clarification

That little game suggested here for club meetings seems to need clarification.

The author writes: "You didn't say enough, I am swamped, because the folks I write to want to know. Please say it this way:

"Rule a sheet into four columns at the right, head these "Country, type of service, value, color."

You can mimeograph the question, but it is fairer to all, to put them on a big well-lettered sheet and hang on the wall numbering the questions and removing the sheet after an agreed interval. Ten questions would allow a maximum of forty points. Have the sheets signed and turned in, no corrections, after guesses, or prompted information can then get into the tabulation. Have three prizes. That is just as vital as knowing the answers."

Which of course is true, and some would add a prize for participation, or attendance and participation. But the average on that form of competition is so low it would surprise you, even with dealers and old timers in the effort. Try it in your club.

"Complete Navy"

And while we talk of titles and the title game—just how many stamps show a "complete Navy" on them? There is a matter to discuss. Actually we could assume that the word "complete" meant war ships, and not tiny boats for Customs duties and unarmed boats that do water service. Maybe the question should say so, but but as it was by a dealer and he was working on a topical (and admitted he didn't know), maybe others will also admit they do not know. There is more than one stamp, thus entitled to listing as a "complete Navy." Maybe it is a question for Ripley to answer.

A Substitute

The paper shortage is raising havoc with a number of collectors who refused to believe that their supply of album sheets would be curtailed. Also some of the current sheets are not up to the old quality, either in the printed quadrille or the paper surface. And beside that some of the blank pages are seemingly of a considerably lighter paper.

If you have this trouble, if your dealer just didn't have the chance to order or some other trouble interfered with his supply, the best thing is to use a stock book you can write in. Tuck the stamps in order with numbers under, and lay away till the album man gets caught up. He will, eventually.

You will notice that I did not say "put the number on the back of the stamp"—although many do that. There is a danger of damage from erasures—and if mint (meaning full original gum) the pencil figures don't help. It is best to mark under, carefully, and in order.

A stock book is far better than envelopes, which can't be had in some places, anyway. But to mothers, sisters, and others holding for some relative in the forces to return to his pet pastime, keep them, sort if possible—but keep them. All. Everything of interest to the collector. Make it a business. It will become a pleasure, and he will thank you many times.

PROOFS

Sometimes truth is stranger than fiction. The last favor is a private view of some proofs that escaped the Royal equerry when the De La Rue firm quit printing stamps. That this establishes the fact that De La Rue did not "prove" dies and such, beyond a usable impression is beside the point. The die proof of the stamp master die added to the needful wording for a post card, and the proof of the card with "Postage-Postage" added to on the side where "Revenue" was originally, in (or with) the artist's correction, and a final of the design as corrected, and as far as known nowhere else is there a duplicate.

This may jar our collectors of proofs, but surely it makes the possession of a British proof and design a major bit of good luck, not to say collecting interest.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON ADDENDA

Philatelic export permits are no longer required for the export of postage stamps, according to an announcement by the Office of Censorship.

The changes being made in philatelic censorship regulations will also permit the shipment of postage stamps to or their receipt from all countries except Germany, Japan, and areas occupied or controlled by these countries. Shipments will be subject to the Foreign Funds Control Regulations of the Treasury Department with respect to business transactions and remittance licenses.

It was pointed out that the censorship of this material will not be relaxed since the change is merely one of procedure, which dispenses with the requirement for an export permit.

The status of philatelic communications which have been detained previously because of wartime security regulations is not altered by virtue of these changes in censorship regulations.

Sales of the 3-cent Roosevelt Memorial Stamp at the Philatelic Agency on June 27, both in value and number of stamps, were three and one-half times greater than the sales for any like denomination in the history of this Postal Branch, according to an official announcement.

The total number of stamps sold at the Agency on the date of first day sale of this Memorial Stamp amounted to 2,504,093, which were valued at $75,122.79. Mail orders received at the Agency amounted to $58,647.18 while window orders received were valued at $16,475.61.

Figures on the number of covers cancelled on the first day of sale are not yet available.

—o—

The Post Office also announced that in order to render more expeditious service in the Philatelic Agency during the issuance of the Roosevelt Memorial Series and the stamps for the Armed Forces, the Philatelic Agency, on June 29, would temporarily withhold from sale all regular stamps of the Presidential Series of 1938.

NUMISMATIC THOUGHTS

By FRANK C. ROSS

Smoke Remittances

A navy attache who had spent several years in China was telling of the many curious ways of the Chinese, one of which was a numismatic angle. The Chinese have a great reverence for their parents who have crossed the River Styx, or whatever river the Chinese cross on their last voyage. They communicate with the departed souls through the "mail." They write their letters on thin chips of wood and then throw the chips into an urn with live coals in it; if the chips burn the letter is transmitted via the smoke route. If they get the idea their parents in the spirit world are pinched for money, they endeavor to relieve their "momentarily short of cash" embarrassment by remitting them some money. They toss some paper money into the urn, and if it burns the smoke transmits the money to the "hard pressed"; if the bills do not burn, the spirits have to continue to pan-handle from their fellow spirits until a more auspicious "smoke" day.

It is claimed the Chinese were the first to use coins and paper money; the history of their coinage through the ages is a numismatic wonderbook. A compilation of Chinese folklore, and of their odd customs and practices would equal ancient mythology in interest.

Emergency Metal

Type sets of Global war coins will be in a class by themselves. They will not be exactly emergency coins, but rather emergency metals. In most instances the dates have gone along in uninterrupted sequence, the size of coins have not varied materially, the denominations changed but infrequently, the designs in most cases remain the same. The most noticable change is in the metals. War needs for certain metals have changed many of the familiar copper, brass and nickel coins to zinc, aluminum, tin, new alloys, and most remarkable of all, steel coins. Only two nations, so far as I can learn, changed to steel, the U. S. one-cent and the Canada five-cent piece. Steel proved a poor substitute, and in response to universal complaints the United States discontinued it as quickly as possible. Collectors are so accustomed to designate their coins by dates and denominations that it will be an odd experience to qualify their designations with the name of the metal. Emergency or necessity coins struck in times of sieges or temporary shortage of coins may be expected to be "off" metal, but the Global war coins in most instances will be the regular, continuous coinage for the duration, and in instances where the new metals prove satisfactory may continue indefinitely after VJ day. War coinage has accepted its priorities and rationings willingly, gladly and proudly, thus contributing its full share towards victory, and its veterans will be proud of the title Emergency Metal.

At Random

Money is the ballast that keeps our Ship of State sailing smoothly on her chartered course.

"Money is not everything; it doesn't always make big men out of small ones, for, the richer some men grow the smaller they seem."

At the mart, money makes the mare go—at the track, horses make the money go.

Counterfeiters and off-singers both specialize in giving us bad notes.

When in doubt what to give your children or friends for a present, play safe and give them a numismatic specimen or a coin book If they are not already coiners, the gift will make them so, and what could be a nobler deed than starting a friend in the right direction.

The husband boasted "When I married I had but one shirt and a five dollar bill;" and the wife complained," and he hasn't changed either of them since." (From a reader.)

Recollections of an Old Collector

By THOMAS L. ELDER

Wartime Solace

THE PUBLIC needs moments when they can get their minds off the critical and painful things of war. I know of no better way to get our minds rejuvenated momentarily than by collecting something. If we don't get this respite our minds are very apt to snap with worry and bad cases of nervous breakdown. Some of us no longer active in business, know what difficulties, even a small business man, was up against to carry on in years gone by, but it is hoped the present activities may be enabled to keep going in spite of the handicaps and dust being thrown into their eyes and obstructions to their footsteps. The folk at home need rejuvenation, too, and small periods spent in fussing with their hobbies will not be found to be a loss. Without hobbies there surely will be a continuation of war-time blues.

Chinese Like Gold

An example in world inflation—Recent word from Chungking tells of the government's plans to raise the value of gold. It seems a lot of gold was being exported to the Chinese government to help its financial condition. The one ounce of gold unit was to be pegged at 35,000 Chinese dollars, whereas the present rate was 20,000 dollars per ounce of gold. Some speculators got wind of the plan and proceeded to buy gold to cash in on the raise, which they did to the tune of some hundred millions of dollars. But the government caught up with them and is prosecuting the malefactors who tried to double their money on the news that the value of gold was to be raised to about double. Well the prospect of an ounce of gold, which is the same as twenty dollars, old value, was indeed news of moment. The whole incident points to the enhanced value of gold and gold coins in the world market.

Scarcity of Small European Coins

There had been a reduced number of copper and nickel coins struck in Europe for several years preceding the outbreak of World War II. Some countries which formerly had large small base coin issues resorted to paper money. Other countries like Germany, were using their copper metal in the manufacture of war materials, cartridge cases and the like. The result was that the former large issues of these coins almost stopped coming to the United States. Although South and Central American countries continued to issue small coins. So the little foreign exchange shops in Philadelphia, Boston, New York and Hoboken, which used to carry these coins came to have few or none. Today so few are seen in such shops as to be negligible. And it is noticed that few are offered in the coin sales. When the writer commenced to hold sales in New York it was not unusual for him to have 2,500 to 5,000 in a single sale. The exigencies in the copper and metal market are seen here, and large lots of shiny new copper and nickel coins are off the market so far as the coin dealers are concerned, while the demand among collectors for these small coins increases and very good prices are secured when such are offered. At this time it is understood Europe prohibits the exportation of copper and nickel coins which are current or modern. That is a condition to be expected, but which may be changed now that the war is over.

Rare gold and silver coins are passed by some European countries' censors, such was in England. The writer has not heard if this includes current copper coins of the realm.

Notes on the Bechtler Coinage

In the 1830's Christopher and August Bechtler came to Rutherfordton, N. C., about 25 miles from where I spend my winters. Their mint was established in 1832, at Sixth and Washington streets. The mint machinery very simple in form, was set down. The old press itself now rests in the American Numismatic Society in New York, purchased by Julius Guttag from Garold Tapp of South Carolina, for a modest sum a few years ago. Mr. Tapp found it resting in the backyard of a farmer. It was standing unprotected in the weather. With it came one die for a coin. Rutherfordton is a typical farm town in the Blue Ridge mountains. Some of its citizens are farmers or descendants of farmers, and although the town has a small railroad, it has also nearby in the hills, its poor Whites who come on a day each month to trade horses, cattle, pigs and produce in the town, attracting a rather interesting and motley gathering. A few of these men and women may have Bechtler coins tucked away in old stockings or bureau drawers at home—that is just possible, although I have never, in a dozen visits to the town, been able to buy a Bechtler coin or unearth any considerable collection of the same. At the time of the minting, store dealers took the coins in exchange at 10% discount and gave merchandise. What a chance to have secured some of the "30 Grain" first gold dollars ever minted in the United States. The Bechtlers were jewelers also and did jewelry repairing; they manufactured and sold repeating rifles and guns. In many ways these Bechtlers were most progressive and lived many years ahead of their time. At that time there was much gold produced locally and there was a natural demand for coins to be made from this large output of gold. Later many Bechtler coins found their way into the Charlotte, N. C., U. S. mint to be made the regular U. S. coinage. The amount of this melting down of Bechtler must have been large. Gold was found in several North Carolina counties, by placer or dirt mining and nuggets of various size were found. Ore was smelted some miles from the town. The largest nugget ever found was in Cabarrus County in North Carolina, and it had a melting value of over $4,000, which would make it worth today about $8,000. Strange to say gold was never plentiful in that particular county of Cabarrus. The Bechtler coins were $1, $2.50 and $5 pieces, never of larger denominations. Scott has listed some 21 varieties of these coins. The "Assayers" are among the rarest—those with "Assayer" on them and "Rutherford County." There is one $2.50, I believe a 70 grain, which has a record of about $1,000. All $2.50's must be considered much rarer than the gold dollars. During ten years, starting in 1832, the Bechtlers coined $2,241,850.-50. This was not all of North Carolina gold. Some of it came from South Carolina and Georgia. The Georgia gold seemed, as a rule, purer gold, of higher carat than the North Carolina. Christopher Bechtler, the founder, died 1842, and his son August Bechtler continued the coinage and affixed his name to the coins he struck, including the commonest gold dollars of 27 G. Some coins were struck after 1840 probably up to the opening of the Civil War, but their number is unknown. The weight of the coins was slightly in excess of the U. S. coins. These coins continued to circulate for years, or were traded in as a medium. Mr. M. O. Dickerson, an old clerk of the county court, was interested in the coins. I met him several times. He had a small, collection of the coins, but since he has passed on I don't know what became of his holdings in the coins.

W. E. Hidden, known to old coin collectors, who died in 1916, was much interested in the Bechtlers. He was a mining engineer and geologist and made up a fair list of the coins, and made in fact, a few plates of them for a book but his regretted death at Ocean Grove ended that effort.

He visited the gold region often. His writings on the coins have become lost to the collectors, though never completed, but were important. I knew Hidden well. He was an indefatigable student of coins in general, especially English, and he would spend hours looking up a certain coin to get its exact mint and description. I visited him at his home not long before his death. At times his income was large but he made some unfortunate investments which left him in poor financial condition, which seemed to break his spirit, and he died at about 63. I had many a fine fish dinner at his home as he lived near the Atlantic and got the fine fish right out of the deep blue for a very moderate cost. Hidden was an interesting and brilliant man. He discovered in North Carolina a stone, which was named the Hiddenite, after him, a very beautiful stone some of which he cut into brilliant facets. There is a fine portrait of the elder Christopher Bechtler in a bank at Rutherfordton, showing him a distinguished looking man. Here is his will, which I have seen myself at the court house at Rutherfordton:-

"My last wish and Will.

When I die my wife will lose her annuity of Brother Lenz; to make up this loss, I have put my son August in such a position, that no one can attack him as to my property.

Then I wish that August would take my negro and goods at a low estimate to secure what is coming to him from his mother.

The Balance, he shall add to the capital which is in the coming business to enlarge it. This capital he needs to be added to advance money on what could have to coin every day with this capital in the coming business I believe he could spare as much as my wife and servant need for a living every year so my wife will not be compelled to be a burden to her children. Our ore will be found good (the gold ore). If it would bring money, I wish my wife would get first so much capital that she could make her living out of the interest, all of the balance of my property as well as this capital, shall be divided in equal shares among my five children, after the death of my wife. My Sons in law who should not be of solid character shall have interest of their shares but shall not have the power to make use of the capital, and in that case shall be secured to their wife and children."

Philadelphia Coin Incidents

My old friend Walter S. Chattin used to have a good store at 266 So. 11th Street in Philadelphia. I visited his shop everytime I went to Philadelphia as well as other shops nearby. There was one on Spruce; in fact S. H. Chapman lived nearby on Spruce street. He is dead about ten years or more. Mr. Chattin is still alive, and lives at Wenonah, N. J. He used to buy good coin collections, and one of those I remember, the Sharp collections which contained many fine U. S. coins, cents, half cents and a wonderful lot of patterns. Walter used to sell me pattern cents, for as low as 75 cents apiece for the commoner sort of 1854 and 1855. That was about 30 years ago. Chattin bought many coins in his time but has done very little recently and his health has not been the best recently. I hope he will improve.

Twenty-five years ago I wrote a note to Henry Chapman in Philadelphia and asked for a quotation on large cents, by the hundred. "I'll sell you them at $2.50 per 100" wrote Chapman. Eagle cents in lots of 100 he had many, and sold me some at "$2 per 100."

Another coin story concerns a huge lot of small nickel cents from 1859 to 1864, held by a dealer on Spruce Street. There were nearly 1,000 in the lot. A price was struck up $1.50 per 100. I counted out cents until I got tired, then in stepped another dealer to assist me. He didn't want the cents but helped to count them. He is still a dealer in Philadelphia. That was a good buy with many of 1859, 1861 and 1864 in nickel at $1.50 per 100. Plenty would like to buy them today for a good deal more money, and the prices for them in Philadelphia have ranged upwards.

Chapman at that time had huge stocks of small cents of all dates and sold 1885 nickel proofs at $1 to $1.50 each. But as I have stated before the demand was only moderate and the new crowd of small cent collectors had not come into being.

When small cents were offered in the sales they were usually sold as a set in a single lot and brought from 5 to 20c per coin even for proof coins and no more.

Chapman at one time had 500 uncirculated small cents of 1864, many of them with an L on the ribbon.

Mr. Chapman has been dead about eight years and his large stock of uncirculated Indian head cents is completely sold out.

The large collection of coins accumulated by the late Dr. Edwin A. Hyatt of Vermont, has passed into the hands of Sam Endicott, N. H.

This collection contained 3000 items including some of the more prominent rarities.

THE HISTORY OF UNCLE TOM'S CABIN

By J. L. WAYNE

Harriet Beecher Stowe, a daughter of Lyman Beecher, D. D., was born in Litchfield, Conn., on June 14, 1812. She was associated in the management of her sister Catherine's school at Hartford from her fifteenth to her twenty-first year, when she was married at Cincinnati, Ohio, to Calvin E. Stowe. Her first literary work "Mayflower; or, Sketches of the Descendants of the Pilgrims" was published at New York in 1849.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" was originally published as a serial in the "National Era," a weekly magazine published in Washington, D. C. The first installment appeared in the issue of June 5, 1851 and the story was completed in the issue of April 1, 1852. In 1852 it was published in book form, in two volumes, at Boston. An illustrated edition appeared in 1853. In book-form the sale in the United States reached 100,000 copies in eight weeks, 200,00 within the year, and 313,000 by April 28, 1856. It is said that 30 editions were published in London in 1852 within a period of six months.

The first London edition was published in May, 1852, and was not large; for the European popularity of a picture of Negro life was doubted. But in the following September the London publishers furnished to one house 10,000 copies per day for about four weeks, and had to employ 1,000 persons in preparing copies to supply the general demand. We cannot follow it beyond 1852; but at that time more than a million copies had been sold in England.

The "Edinburgh Review' for April, 1855, in an article "Slavery in the United States," stated: "In France "Uncle Tom" still covers the shop windows of the Boulevards; and one publisher alone, Eustace Barba, has sent out five different editions in different forms. Before the end of 1852 it had been translated into the Italian, Spanish, Danish, Swedish, Dutch, Flemish, German, Polish and Magyar. There are two different Dutch translations and twelve different German ones; and the Italian translation enjoys the honor of the Pope's prohibition. It has been dramatized in 20 different forms, and acted in every capital in Europe and in the free States of America."

In 1862 it was ascertained that millions of copies were in circulation and there were additional translations into the Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese, Welsh, Russian, Wendish, Wallachian, Armenian, Arabic, and Romaic.

One of the early collectors of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was Thomas Watts of the British Museum who made an extensive collection of the different translations. The literary merits of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" were generally acknowledged; its conformity to truth was denied by some and questioned by many: therefore in the following year the authoress published "A Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin; presenting the Original Facts and Documents upon which the Story is founded; together with Corroborative Statements verifying the Truth of the Work." This was published at Boston in 1853 with a two volume edition of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

of the many works of Harriet Beecher Stowe. In December, 1868, she became co-editor with Donald G. Mitchell, of a new magazine, entitled "Hearth and Home," which is still published. Mrs. Stowe died at Hartford, Conn., July 1, 1896.

Books Received

HOW TO KNOW THE MOSSES by H. S. Conard, head of the Department of Biology of Grinnell College, is a late book of interest to Natural Science hobbiests that covers a new specialized subject.

Moss is interesting to those who collect along this line, and this book catalogs and illustrates all the mosses of this hemisphere. It brings out a fact interesting to all of us, namely that there are an average of one hundred mosses in every average county. A very interesting prelude is included on how to study mosses.

It is published by Wm. C. Brown & Company of Dubuque, Iowa. Spiral bound the price is $1.50, cloth bound $2.50.

—o—

HOBBIES is in receipt of a very interesting book entitled HORSE BRASS COLLECTONS by H. S. Richards of Sutton-Coldfield, England. The book is profusely illustrated and portrays the hobby of collecting brass of all kinds that ornaments harness for horses.

This a hobby that is apparently pursued quite diligently and widely in Britain. Yet, we have scarcely heard of it in this country.

Some pictures are shown of horses wearing harness gaudily bedecked with brass from forehead to tail. The various brass ornaments portray every conceivable design, mostly in filigree work, apparently to lighten the load.

This is the third book Mr. Richards has written on the subject.

NATURE AND ART, by George J. Cox. The subject of the body, the beautiful, has been discussed at some length by the present-day prose writer. However, until Nature and Art, the subject has not been brought forth so vividly in book-length rhyme. The sincerity and warmness of the author is strongly felt in the book's artistic beauty.

Although it is not a book for the layman who cannot appreciate the subject expressed in rhyme and adjoining illustrations, it does on the other hand, bring to those who value nature and art thoughts of better worlds with unravished loveliness and no greeds betrayed.

Price $2.50. Bruce Humphries, Inc., Boston, Publishers.

I would suggest that all art students and those who aspire to the subject take head and read this book from cover to cover.—Cordelia Conrad.

FIREARMS

WESTERN HISTORY

More than a score of pistols which spat flame and lead in the roaring, hectic days of the Building of America now rest peacefully in the Union Pacific Historical Museum, Omaha, Neb., according to a recent report by The Railroad Trainman.

Displayed is the .41 Tom Horn, famed foe of cattle thieves, whose zealousness ended with an abrupt jerk November 20, 1903, at Cheyenne, Wyo.

Horn had used the revolver as a "cheater" in his capture of the "Comanche Kid," a southwestern badman, while Horn was a deputy United States marshal at Sonora, Ariz.

The "Kid" got the drop on Horn when they met, took his big .45 away from him, but Horn soon after drew his .41 "cheater" which was hidden on his person. He killed the "Kid" with it.

Later, Horn went to work for a stockgrowers association in Wyoming and when he became impatient with the difficulty of obtaining convictions legally, he started gunning for suspected cattle thieves.

"HOME OF THE RIFLE"

Roger Shaw, New York, writing to the New York Herald Tribune, makes some interesting comments on the home of the rifle. Says he:

"The Bavarian town of Nuernberg now taken by the Americans, is a home of many things—stoves, the Reformation, the Meistersinger, the Nazi conventions, etc. But Nuernberg, favorite German saga center for American children, invented yet another American specialty—the deadly rifle.

"The rifle migrated thence to the Rhenish Palatinate; and so on to Pennsylvania with the so-called Dutch. From Berks and neighboring counties it moved on with Daniel Boone to the dark and bloodly grounds of far Kaintuck', where it became known as the long "Kentucky" rifle. Its most famous victory was that gained over Wellington's Peninsular veterans at New Orleans (1815). The Revolutionary Hessians also used Nuernberg rifles, the Jaeger formations, green-clad, ably competing Morgan's riflemen, as at Saratoga and elsewhere.

"Since the rifle was one of the formative, decisive features in American history, as it "won the West," Nuernberg is not without import in American historical annals. They that take to the rifle shall perish by the rifle, as noted in April, 1945. Incidentally, too, Nuernberg was the medieval home of the Hohenzollerns, before their migration to Brandenburg-Berlin in the 1400's."

While hunting one of his foes, Horn thought he saw the suspect and blazed away. The person Horn killed was the 16-year old son of the man he was after.

The boy had been wearing his father's coat. The state hung Horn, and his "cheater," which Horn had had changed from a single action to a double action revolver, now is in the museum.

In a nearby case is the Colt .44 which General J. S. Casement carried

THE KENTUCKY RIFLE, by Dillin
Our modern Garand Army Rifle, which is considered the best in the world, is a direct descendant of the Kentucky rifle. Today, as in the past, our American gunmakers have furnished our boys with the finest rifles to be had. The fact that we have never lost a war is due to the courage of our soldiers and to the superior weapons furnished by Yankee ingenuity. The Kentucky rifle and the ability to shoot straight is a proud heritage handed down by our Colonial forefathers. Born at Lancaster, Pa., it was carried to Kentucky by Daniel Boone where it earned name and fame. Handmade by master craftsmen this rifle is a thing of beauty, as well as one of the most accurate rifles ever produced. Every lover of history as well as every gun collector should own at least one specimen of this historical arm. To know and appreciate your "Kaentuck" you should by all means have a copy of this remarkable book. Deluxe leatherette binding, $10.00 postpaid. n54 through the Civil War and during his construction work for the Union Pacific.
GEORGE N. HYATT — 102 W. 18th St., Wilmington 36, Del.

It is silver mounted, engraved, and has carved ivory grips.

Also, there is a tiny .22 patented in 1871 which was kept on the desk of Charles R. Hannan, Sr., a pioneer Council Bluffs banker.

There is a huge .69 horse pistol and there are flintlocks dating back to the American Revolution, as well as pepper-box types, derringers, ball and cap and muzzle-loading types.

In one case are several types of guns taken from train robbers and in still another are bullet molds, cartridge loaders, powder flasks and horns, shot pouches and other pieces of equipment once used in pistol shooting.

Early Colt Item

From the Army and Navy Chronicle, Vol. 2, March, 1836, Washington, D. C., page 133.

IMPROVEMENT IN FIRE ARMS—A Mr. Colt, of Connecticut, has exhibited in this city, a newly invented rifle and pistol, of admirable construction. The chamber contains tubes for several charges of powder and ball; it may be made to contain from six to ten. In cocking the gun to shoot, the chamber revolves on an axis, and brings in succession every tube in the chamber in line with that of the barrel; and when discharged, the act of cocking brings the next tube into position, until all are discharged. All the tubes may be recharged as quickly as a single gun of ordinary structure. This new implement of War has been shown to the President, the Secretary of War and Navy, many officers of both the army and navy, and is considered the most efficient instrument of its kind ever invented. We made an experiment with the rifle pistol, and found it as sure in firing, and accurate to the aim, as the best of the common construction.

We are informed that Mr. Colt has already obtained a charter from the New Jersey legislature, and is about to organize a joint stock company, with a capitol of $300,000 for the purpose of manufacturing rifles and pistols, for private use, and that in a few months his guns will be on the market."

In transmitting the foregoing information to this department, Major B. R. Lewis, of the United States Ordnance Department, comments:

"I found, recently, an old Ordnance Board Report, dated September 19, 1837, covering trials of four different Colt long arms. The pieces tested were as follows: Colt carbine, musket caliber; Colt rifle, musket caliber; Colt musket; and Colt small rifle. They used 100, 100, 134, and 36 grains of powder respectively. As the musket evidently excited the most interest, details of only this were given, as follows: Barrel 42 inches, length of 7-shot receiver 3¾ inches, diameter of receiver 3⅛ inches, weight four lb., diameter of cylinder bore .64 inch, diameter of barrel bore .64 at breech and .63 at muzzle, weight of musket 15 lb. 5 oz., charge 134 grains powder (Note: The regular flint musket charge was 144 grains, of which about 10 was used for priming). After the tests, the Board recommended that the charge for the Colt musket be reduced to 100 grains, thus shortening the cylinder, and allowing a weight reduction of a pound or more.

"Has anyone seen these Paterson Colt long arms of musket caliber (.64 inch)? There should be both smoothbore and rifled types with 42-inch barrel, and a carbine of the same caliber. The 'small rifle' mentioned was very likely the usual Paterson Colt rifle.

"Could some of the so-called 'shotguns' be mixed up in this?"

Peru's Bronze Age

By ALLEN BROWN

In the Andean area of South America, metal working reached a peak of perfection at an early time before white influence. The early Spanish gold seekers speak of incomparable gold work, equal to many contemporary works in Europe. Gold, silver, copper and tin were used in most all forms, plating, alloyed and even soldered. There seems to be no limit to their effort in working metal. Considering the isolated development and the crude methods used, it is more remarkable when we sum up their accomplishments.

In the illustration five tools and three axes are shown. All eight pieces are made of bronze, either cast or beaten to shape. All pieces are from the Lambayeque district in Northern Peru.

In a previous article we showed you holed stone axes, which were hafted by tying through the hole and around the handle, rather than by inserting the handle through the hole. These three bronze axes are counterparts of the hole-tied stone axe. Above the axes are three diggers each having a hollow shank for handle inserting. This method of hafting was used by the Mississippi Valley copper workers, just preceding the early colonial white explorers. At the top are shown two "Incan type" knives, of a very hard bronze, somewhat softer than steel, yet much harder than iron. The knife at the left is elaborate, having an embossed handle and on top a figure of the pre-Incan monster with a man on his back. Incidentally, the man is riding the monster backwards and is twisting the monster's tail. A happy ending, no doubt.

—o—

According to a newspaper story from Albany, N. Y., one John T. Bender left a "cigar-store Indian" with a decorator to have the warrior's war-paint touched up, and, after a reasonable period of time elapsed and the wooden image was not returned, Mr. Bender proceeded to sue for the "vanished redskin."

A Waco, Texas, newspaper states that among the Indian items willed to the Texas collection of Baylor university of that city by the late Clint Padgitt, is to be found "a pair of beaded buckskin gloves, two wampum money bags, a war club with a scalp-lock attached, which were made by the Waco Indians, and an Indian pipe of peace which belonged to Chief Yellow Wolf of the Wacos."

From the "Forty Years Ago in Kansas City" column of the Kansas City (Mo.) Star: "Mrs. Adaline Crane, eldest daughter of the late Judge Matthew R. Walker, brother of the chief of the Wyandotte Indians, died Saturday night at Wyandotte, I. T. She was born in Sandusky, Ohio, June 17, 1841. Funeral services will held at the home of her sister, Mrs. John A. Hale, 2402 North Tenth, Kansas City, Kansas."

It is a matter worthy of note that the Indian chief, Tecumseh, was for some time the guest of Governor Worthington; and one of the great curiosities to be found at this day in the drawing-room of Adena, is Tecumseh's tomahawk, presented to Governor Worthington on the occasion of this visit.

General Crook, the famous Indian fighter, stands six-feet in his stockings, and is as straight as an arrow. He has been 36 years in the service, and knows his business thoroughly. When on the war-path General Crook wears an old canvas suit said to be worth $1.25. He rides at the head of his column on a mule, with a rifle across his arm. He is a devoted hunter and fisherman, and it is said that he would go a thousand miles to shoot a bear.—Harper's Bazaar, May 5, 1888, p. 287.

Simpson Tubby (an Eastern Choctaw and for many years a preacher in the Methodist church) said that about 65 years ago it was customary for the Choctaw to scatter out annually into camp from 40 to a 100 miles from home. They set out early in the fall and returned to their reserved lands at the opening of spring to prepare their gardens. They usually took along their Indian ponies, short, dumpy animals, which would, however, carry as much as any horse that they have today. Every night they had a dance and were lectured by their chief, being particularly charged not to disturb the white man. The men made bows and arrows and blowguns and killed all of the game they were allowed to, because the native game laws were made to apply to foreign places as well as their own country. The older women cut and dried canes and made baskets every night, while the young people danced. . . . —From "Choctaw Social and Ceremonial Life," by John R. Swanton, p. 161.

The historic seat of the Natchez Tribe was not distant more than 30 miles from the Troyville (Louisiana) Mounds and this circumstance has led some historians to regard those Indians as the builders of all the mounds in this region, but the archaeological evidence secured does not support this theory, as none of the potsherds found at Johnsville bear the scroll-and-disc design characteristic of the Natchez pottery.—"The Troyville Mounds, Catahoula Parish, La," by Wilslow M. Walker; pp. 43-44.

Mr. Barker's imitations at one time or another. In recent weeks he has played Meatball, the talking dog, and also did the barking for an army K-9 hero, about which an entire radio drama was built. On a Reader's Digest program recently, he was the goat discovered under a soldier's bed at an army base hospital.

But with all his professional engagements, Mr. Barker really gets the most fun out of his imitations when he visits the circus menagerie. He can start all the 50 elephants in the Ringling menagerie trumpeting with one call. When he imitates a lion, all the cats in the cages pick up their ears to listen and are soon roaring and growling in answer.

Scarcely an evening passes but that Mr. Barker has a radio imitation to do—he averages 15 a week—but he does not linger at the studio. His sound making finished, he heads for the subway and is soon back in his circus den.

Just now he is engrossed with the problem of how best to display a sunburst wheel from a famous old parade wagon sent him from the Ringling winter quarters in Sarasota. The wheel weighs several hundred pounds and can't be moved here and there at the collector's whims.

But it is a desirable reminder of the days when the circus parade, so dear to the hearts of circus fans, wended its way through city streets. And the wagon wheel, refurbished, will find a prominent place in the Barker collection.

NATURAL HISTORY

COLLECTING and GIVING

REPOSING on the center table in one of the rooms of the Museum of Hobbies, maintained in connection with HOBBIES publishing plant is a fat but orderly notebook, which was compiled by the E. C. Messers of Glendale, California. It is a work of art, and besides chronicling the flora and fauna of southern California, serves as a model for present day and future collectors. Each page carries a bit of typewritten descriptive matter, either in the form of a poem, quotation or statement of fact, about the specimens shown.

The flowers and other plant life are first pressed, and then placed artistically on the pages. The typewritten matter is then added and the entire page is then covered with cellophane, so that it may be preserved and read again and again without fear of spoiling it.

Specimen pages from the notebooks of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Messer, California.

One of the nicest things about the Messers' hobby is the fact that they share it. As soon as a volume is finished they present it to one of their friends.

THE HUMMINGBIRD

Writing in the museum bulletin of the University of South Dakota, Henry E. Lee gives some interesting paragraphs on the hummingbird. Says he:

"The Ruby-throated Hummingbird, the tiniest of the birds which honors our state with its presence during the summer season, is doubtless the earliest of North American birds to be noted in ornithological literature.

"A letter written from Boston, New England and dated Oct. 26, 1670, by John Winthrop, Esq., governor of Connecticut to Francis Willoughby, Esq., was published in the Philosophical Transactions of London for the year 1671. This letter includes a description of the American Humming Bird and advises that a nest and eggs of this 'curious bird' is also being sent. Winthrop quaintly observes, but 'Tis an exceedingly little bird and only seen in summer, and mostly in gardens, flying from flower to flower sucking honey out of a flower as a bee doth.'

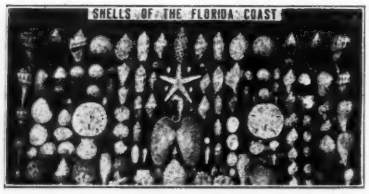

"In 1693 the Philosophical Transactions published another article entitled, 'The description of the American Tomineus or Hum Bird, communicated by Nehemiah Grew, M. D. and Fellow of the Royal Society, and written by Mr. Hammersley of Coventry'. We quote the following extracts from the articles: 'There is in most parts of America a bird called by the English the Hum Bird, by the Spanish, Tomineus. It is the least of all birds that I have seen there; her leg and foot together is but half an inch, the other parts answerable, and the trunk of her body not an inch. I saw one of the nests made of cotton-wool, in form and the bigness of a pea, or oval form. Who can admire but to see the whole body, and all the parts of a bird folded up in an egg, little bigger than a pepper-corn? . . . An Indian Saggamore is not in his full pomp and bravery without one of these birds in his ear for a pendant.'

"The Ruby-throated Hummingbird was given its scientific name, Trochilus colubris by Linnaeus in 1758, so it can claim membership in the 'First Families of America,' at least."

MUREX

By HELEN E. PETERS

ONE OF the really interesting species in the shell kingdom is the Murex. Not only are some of the most beautiful shells, both in coloring and formation, found in this family, but they have made history as well, for it was from some of these that the famous "Purple," often mentioned in the Bible, was obtained.

In this particular variety, when the operculum is pressed, a dull red fluid is expelled. The ancient Tyrians, not knowing how to obtain the fluid otherwise, ground the entire animal in mortars, then squeezed the fluid out of the fleshy parts and discarded the shells. To one part of this fluid, they added soda and five to six parts of water.

Of course, only a minute quantity of this coloring matter was obtained from each animal, and consequently the dye was extremely expensive. Wool, dyed in this mixture, was worth approximately $200 per pound, so it is easy to understand why the "Purple" was only for Royalty and the very rich.

Another type, found mostly in European waters, inhabits oyster beds. It obtains its food by boring holes in the oyster shells and sucking out the contents. It is a very fastidious eater, never touching dead flesh. It can drill through an oyster shell in about four hours.

Along the Trail

An item listed "somewhere in Hawaii," says: "A favorite hobby among marines stationed here is collecting and stringing rare sea shells. They send them home in the form of beads for their families and sweethearts."

Footprints of prehistoric men have been found imbedded in the sandstone near Chickasha, Okla.

A news item in a Madison, Wis., paper is the source of the following:

"City Engineer Tim Harrington owes his wife a steak dinner!

"Far a long time Tim and his better half had wanted a bird bath for their yard and after a long search Tim found one in spite of wartime difficulties.

"He set it up in the yard, then he and the Missus took up a position at the window to watch developments. They wondered what bird would be the first to visit the new cafeteria for a cooling drink.

"Tim offered to buy the dinners if the first visitor wasn't a common English sparrow and his wife took the bet.

"As they watched, a tiny tow-headed neighbor girl tip-toed softly, to the bird bath, placed her hands daintily on the sides of the bird fount, and daintily sipped its cooling waters.

"The wife, say Tim, insists that he pay the bet, and he can see no way out of it!"

A MINIATURE DOLL HOUSE

WHEN Mrs. Gertrude Land Shelton, Oklahoma, had collected an appreciable number of miniatures, she thought it would be a good idea to house them in a suitable manner. Since many of them tied right in with the furnishings of a small doll house, a doll house became their abode.

Mrs. Shelton decided, that with the proper treatment, orange crates would be the wise solution, besides it was not hard to obtain them. At first her friends were skeptical, but when they saw how well the project was shaping up some of them became interested and volunteered their services. A friend well versed in such matters explained to her how to case the windows. Next, a man from one of the local lumber houses patiently showed her how to put the glass into window frames so that it would stay. Others helped with the roofing and the building of the chimney. After the exterior was finished, Mrs. Shelton's mother took a hand in the papering and decorating, and in no time, the nine rooms were ready to have the furniture set in and arranged.

A friend volunteered to make the lace curtains for the 15 windows. Other friends made the rugs, the bath towels, and similar accessories, and one crocheted a tiny bed pillow, the size of a 50 cent piece, and fashioned doilies for the miniature tables.

A brother labored over a three-shelf whatnot, about the length of a match. A Texas friend provided a double boiler about the size of a thimble.

In case you are desirous of working some of your miniatures into a small doll house, Mrs. Shelton's descriptions of some of her rooms, no doubt, will give you suggestions.

"The upstairs bed room has a light blue wall paper. The bed is covered with a blue crocheted spread and bears a tiny pillow in blue and white. The small what-not hangs above the bed and it bears very tiny miniatures of vases, etc. A telephone rests on the nightstand. A smoking stand hugs the side of the red easy chair. The dresser is complete to the vanity set with its tiny, brush, comb and other pieces. There is a sewing machine that really pedals in this room. It is one-half inch high. Pictures the size of a three-cent stamp add another touch of home to this lilliputian bedroom.

"One glimpse into the bathroom shows that it is about as complete as any small room could be. It has the tub, lavatory, medicine chest, and bars of soap, so small, that you can hardly see them. The scales and the hot water bottle have their own niche in this well appointed bathroom."

In these days of rationing, you will look wistfully at her dining room, and in case you can take it you will see a plate of meat sandwiches, corn on the cob, and other food.

And if that isn't enough you step into the kitchen where you find jolly folks mixing waffles and getting ready to eat them. Here you also find a tiny coffee grinder, an ice box, ironing board, an electric stove, a cook book, mixing bowls and spoons, and dozens of other items to keep meals hearty and regular.

For recreation there is the music room in the basement, where, supposedly, members of the lilliputian house gather around the tiny Baby Grand piano at the close of the day to turn out an old fashioned tune or two.

As the Shelton collection grows, no doubt, other rooms will be added for adequate housing of the specimens.

Cross section of Gertrude Land Shelton's doll house, where she makes a showing of her innumerable miniatures.

Miniature silver, illustrated from the collection of Ruth Young Taylor

STERLING SILVER FROM LILLIPUT

By RUTH YOUNG TAYLOR

I SUSPECT that when this picture was snapped "everyone wanted to get into the act," as Jimmy Durante would say. Most of my pieces of silver got into the picture. You get a better idea of the size of the silver by knowing that the furniture is on a scale of three-fourths of an inch to the foot, except for the dining table in the background, and the coffee bar, both of which are much larger. On and in these pieces of mahogany furniture are displayed 100 silver items in five different scales.

The smallest tea set here is placed on the small, round table which is on a Hungarian petit-point square. The later, despite its smallness, has 1600 stitches to the inch. If this silver were placed on a dime, there would be plenty of room to spare. At the left, a one and a half inch walnut chest is visible; this houses 32 pieces of flat silver. The six-piece tea set on the floor at the right, next larger, speaks for itself, as do the other articles which are still larger. The knives, forks, and spoons on the larger table are made of coin silver and have considerable age attached to them. The hostess on the right, behind the sideboard, is well preserved for a centenarian. She is no doubt just as proud of her olive green, Venetian lamps, her one-fourth inch salt and pepper shakers, porcelain tea caddy, as she is of her silver.

The ruler in the middle of the lower part of the picture aids shows the relative sizes of the various objects.

MINERALOGICAL THOUGHTS

By W. SCOTT LEWIS

A Rare Metal

HERE is our $64 question. Name a white metal which melts at a temperature of 86°. We will wager that the average mineral student will have to look in a book for the answer. His table will show him that it is gallium, symbol Ga, atomic number 31, atomic weight 69.72, discovered in 1875 by Lecoq de Boibaudran (and we are glad they didn't name the element after him).

Gallium has a specific gravity of 5.9, which is not extremely heavy for a metal, being much less than iron, manganese, and many others. Water has no effect on it and it oxidizes only slowly in air. It can be dissolved in ammonia or potassium hydroxide but the only common acid having much effect on it is hydrochloric.

There is no generally recognized ore of gallium although it is sometimes associated with zinc and is recovered from British coals.

Gallium is one of the metals that may become very useful in the future if it is ever found in sufficient quantity, but at present the chief use is in making medium high-temperature thermometers.

Samples which we have are from a new discovery that was made with a Mineralight at a tungsten mine, and they come next to the scheelite deposit. They appear to us to consist of a somewhat altered igneous rock containing quartz and albite among other things. There is no question as to the presence of gallium up to at least 1.0% as the determination was made by the John Herman Laboratory of Los Angeles which has a reputation for extreme accurracy.

The complete list of elements present in the samples which have been tested is as follows: Silicon, sodium, aluminum, calcium, potassium, gallium, magnesium, manganese, iron, copper, lead, tin, boron, strontium, and silver, there being only 0.001% of the latter, however.

Super-Kick

The most active of all elements is fluorine, a strange liquid that boils at 187° C. turning into a greenish-yellow gas that has no direct use in industry but is of rapidly increasing value when chemically united with other substances. We were formerly familiar with it only in the form of hydrofluoric acid, a liquid with a mean disposition that had to be kept in wax containers because it would eat a hole through a glass bottle quicker than bootleg whiskey ever did back in prohibition days.

The most widely used fluorine compound today is perhaps the one technically known as dichlorodifluoromethane, a non-corrosive and non-inflammable refrigerant and air conditioning agent popularly known as "freon."

Other valuable compounds are sodium fluoride which makes wood flame and fungus proof and a number of fluosilicates that are used as insecticides. The war has led to new industrial uses that will doubtless be more fully described in future months.

The mineral fluorite has many metallurgical uses as a flux and in the refining of copper, antimony and lead. A mixture of fluorite and bauxite can be used as a substitute for cryolite in the manufacture of aluminum.

The most important source of fluorine is fluorite, sometimes called fluorspar, a calcium fluoride containing 48.9% fluorine. This mineral has a hardness of 4 and a specific gravity of 3.01 to 3.25. It belongs to the isometric crystal system, the crystals usually being cubes.

Fluorite is a handsome mineral which may occur in almost any color and for that reason it is one of the most popular with collectors, a fine fluorite collection being something to show with pride. Last winter we had the promise of a shipment from the famous Rosiclare, Ill., locality and part of it arrived. However, it was obtained with difficulty as the supplier was caught in a blizzard and had to keep his engine running all night to keep from freezing to death. He found that no one was allowed near the main mine and all the small mines were closed down because of the bad weather. However by going from house to house he obtained 50 pounds of rather small pieces with a very few larger ones. No two specimens are just alike. Some are so dark they look nearly black until held up to a strong light when they become deep purple. Now and then one is so pale it looks almost like halite. In most cases the cubes are grown into each other and not distinct.

Why Conservation

Our present civilization rests on a firm foundation in one respect anyway, because it is literally founded on the rocks. All of our metals with the exception of part of our magnesium come from the rocks, and without them modern civilization would come to an abrupt end. Practically everything we use in our daily lives is either made of metal or else it was constructed with the aid of tools that were made of metal.

Unfortunately the world's supply of metals is distinctly limited and there is no way in which it can be replaced except by the slow processes of nature that require enormous periods of time. In spite of this fact man is wasting his dwinding stock as if the entire crust of the earth were composed of metal. The drain that results from war is tremendous while even during times of peace, new inventions constantly call for a greater use of metals in spite of the increased use of plastics. stitutions are possible, but taking the world as a whole, the importance of metals is steadily increasing.

Ores are of all degrees of richness and the best deposits are naturally used first, so they are the ones that are now being depleted. As they become exhausted it will be necessary to work low-grade ores and this will greatly increase the expense. Some more rich deposits will doubtless be discovered in remote parts of the world, but the very remoteness will add to the expense of the material. We must also remember that many countries are rapidly becoming industrialized that were formerly largely agricultural, and this will mean less raw material for export. A steel industry is now being started in China, while Brazil is taking rapid steps along the road to industrialization.

We hear a great deal about the "have" and the "have not" nations. At the present time the countries devoid of mineral resources are at the mercy of those holding the world's supply and it is argued that there should be an international plan that would compel the "haves" to divide up with the "have nots." Naturally this idea is not especially popular with the "haves" although some of them are beginning to worry about their own future. Our country has been especially blessed with mineral resources although it is dependent upon other for its nickel, tin, and some other minerals.—Scott's Mineralogical Bulletin.

GEM VILLAGE HOLDS ANNUAL ROCK SHOW

Durango, Colo.—Gem Village, located two miles west of Bayfield on U. S. Highway 160, is not a large place but it is unique. It is the home of perhaps the greatest collection of specimen rocks and stones in all the southwestern part of the United States. The first annual rock show was held there recently. The display included rocks, minerals, cabinet specimens and other collections from various parts of the region and western America.

Boodle Lane of Kansas, was there with a load of Tri-state minerals. Jack O'Brien of Illinois had a load of his superb crystals and other materials. S. N. Green of Illinois, was at Gem Village. He will be back in July with his family.

Wm. Poese of Ohio, has let the contract for his house and will be at Gem Village in 1946 with his family. He teaches lapidary art in Cleveland and is the author of some books on precious stones.

Glenn Gardner of California is also at Gem Village.

W. C. Eyles is busy night and day making "Streamliner" diamond saws. He just returned from a collecting trip and has some excellent cutting materials.

This is to be an annual event as soon as conditions will permit dealers from all over the U. S. to attend these shows to buy and sell rocks.

TURQUOISE

One of the Earliest Jewels

Renewed interest in turquoise—a stone particularly suited to both gold and silver—gives rise to the question where does turquoise — (pronounced TOOR-KWAZ)—come from?

Turquoise is found in a number of places and before the war, off to Russia to the great annual fair of Nijni Novgorod and to Moscow, went the finest gem turquoise in the world. Mined in the northeastern part of Persia between Nishapur and Meshed province of Khorassan, it is partly cut and then carried by Persian merchants to Russia. These ancient mines are still producing as they did ten centuries ago.

Specimens are also found in Burma, China, Thibet, and on the Isthmus of Suez, but as a rule are of little value, the color fading or turning green on exposure to light,

For the past twenty years great quantities of turquoise have been mined in New Mexico, Nevada, Arizona and California. The best of the New Mexican stones were guaranteed to keep their color and were marked with an O trade mark on the back.

MY POST CARD HOBBY

When I was a child I saved every thing that was given or sent to me, and (I still do). That included post cards, too, but they accumulated in a haphazard fashion, and I kept them in a mixed sort of way in boxes and drawers, except a few I had put into two scrap books.

A few years ago, I came across my cards, and decided to do something with them. I arranged them alphabetically as to States, and then according to the cities in each state. Next, I made a typewritten list of them and decided to put them in albums.

Soon after that an article about my collection appeared in our local paper. Post cards were sent to me, and some sent for me to come and pick up family and individual collections. Now, I have cards from many countries, states, cities, and also a miscellaneous collection. In my leisure time I began to arrange my cards in loose leaf scrapbooks from the five and ten stores and they have served my purpose very well. I began with Alabama and so on through the States. From time to time I have revised my list. At this writing, I have about 400 cards and fourteen albums, and am making an index file instead of the list, as they are easier to keep that way.

The Western Kentucky State Teachers College, in my city, has a Kentucky Building Museum in which are housed only things native to Kentucky. There are also gardens and grounds in which grow only flowers, shrubs, and trees, native to Kentucky.

On one of those visits they told me they were going to have a Hobby Show and would like to have some of my cards for one exhibit to which I agreed.

I was very surprised and thrilled and delivered four large albums and one large miscellaneous album, for the display. I had many compliments on my collection and the arrangement of them. The librarian, thought so much of them she asked me to will them to the school, but it had so happened that a few days before I had promised them to my young son, Earl, at my demise, and he would be glad to give them to the school. That seemed such a long time to wait, that the museum started a similar collection.

My hobby is a very interesting and educational one and is a real tonic.

Bonnie M. Carr, Kentucky.

More on Tuck Oilettes

New York — In regard to Tuck Oilettes not being printed after 1910, I do not know when mine was printed, but it is postmarked, "London, 1926," and bears the wording, "Raphael Tuck and Sons' Oilette, post card No. 3544, by C. E. Flower, London, Art Publishers to Their Majesties the King and Queen.

The post card shows the Horse Guards, Whitehall, and it is very colorful and it looks like an oil painting.

I was particularly interested in the card after my son, who has been in England and in Ireland two one-half years, wrote me about going to London on leave and seeing the changing of the Guards, Westminster Abbey, and Parliament Square.—Mrs. Frank E. Gee.

"AN EDUCATION"

To the reader who writes to inquire about beginning a collection of post cards, we refer her to an article that Gordon K. MacEdwards wrote for this department some few years ago in which he said, summarily:

"The collection of single specimens of these various designs is more than a satisfaction of the acquisitive instinct which is the basis of so many hobbies. It provides an education in the decorative arts, their trends and development. It induces a knowledge of the processes of graphic reproduction. Interesting sidelights on the history of card games and on the characteristics of various nationalities also develop.

"The ease with which the cards may be mounted and displayed is an advantage. One method is to mount

Demorest's Monthly For 1873

Demorest's Monthy Magazine for 1873 concerned itself largely with fashions and modes of living to help make the life of the homemaker more enjoyable.

One article on "Secondary Toilettes" is interesting in view of present day fashions. The author said:

"But even rich women do not disdain having recourse to what are called 'secondary' toilettes' They are very useful for small 'evenings' for 'at home' and for the opera. For though the aggregate effect of ladies' dress at the opera is very gay, even magnificent on a 'first night,' yet regular habitues are very careful not to display or conceal their freshest and most elegant toilettes in an opera box.

"It is the pretty silk of last season, veiled with a fichu of crepe or lace, a ruffled skirt under a polonaise of striped gauze or grenadine, or the simple striped or somewhat faded silk, under an overdress of white embroidered muslin. An elaborate coiffure, delicate kid gloves, laces, perfumes, flowers, a rich wrap, half draped, and the partial concealment of the seat or box makes a 'secondary' or house dinner toilette pass muster very creditably; in fact, it is more in place than 'full' dress with low necks and short sleeves could possibly be under such circumstances.

"Sleeveless jackets of black, blue, or chocolate-colored velvet are also very much seen over fine striped and plain silks for opera and house dinner wear, the basque cut small and made perfectly plain, only edged with a double piping, the inner piping the color of the dress."

The same volume, under the heading of "Revival of the Antique," said:

"There is a revival in many things of quite old styles for every day wear. Large old-fashioned square veils, for example, square handkerchiefs of twilled silk for the neck with fringed borders, side pockets of leather with belt and strap attached, gilt or steel mounted, and coiffures combed up straight from the neck and mounted in puffs on the top or at the back of the head. Very antique these, but very ugly."

The dolman, too, took up some space in the magazine's dissertation on fashion news.

"The Dolman, which is now so fashionable, is, after all, nothing but a short paletot with very wide hanging sleeves. Only one is tired of the word paletot, and a new one had to be found.

"The Dolman is made mostly of cloth, and very richly braided and embroidered. It is useful especially as an extra mantle, to be donned over the complete costume when the day is cold."

them eight to a page on letter-size sheets of gray cover stock punched to fit an ordinary three-ring binder. The cards are grouped according to age, method of reproduction, number of colors, subject, nation of origin, etc., to make harmonious pages.

"Cards are easy to secure through the efforts of the collector and his friends. They may be obtained from the jokers and extra blank cards which come with new packs or any of the fifty-two cards in a discarded deck.

"For anyone with a leaning toward the artistic, card collecting provides a delightful diversion and a possible source of future profit."

Collecting Here and There

Collecting post cards via the travels of one's friends will be somewhat curtailed this year because of the restrictions on travel. However, we can sit out under the shade of our old apple trees and browse through the albums of yesteryear, and recall the scenes visited by friends as well as those we have travelled personally.

"At the Sign of the Crest"

Fitch Coat-of-Arms

By MABEL LOUISE KEECH

ON THE COVER page of my copy of "Armorial Porcelain of the Eighteenth Century," by Sir Algernon Tudor-Craig, with foreword by Sir Henry Farnham Burke, Garter King of Arms, is pasted a letter from the author, granting me "full permission to use anything" in his book that I wish.

Thus you see this unusual plate, wrought and decorated in China about 1730, the Fitch shield in the center, the crest above it on the rim, both in color, surrounded by the decoration prevalent during the Yung-Tching period (1723-1736)—open trellis-work appearance, entirely in underglaze Nankin blue. The shade of green used by heraldists.

The author tells of errors made by the Chinese who were not versed in English heraldry, such as odd-shaped shields as the one here; placing of metal on metal or color on color; depicting the wrong bird or animal, because their concepts were not the same; engraving family notes that were written on the original copy, not meant for the china. "On the whole, however, it must be conceded that the reproduction of the arms on the china is beautifully carried out, enabling the collector with the requisite heraldic knowledge to identify, in the large majority of cases, the name of the family concerned."

Four sons of Thomas Fitch of Bocking, co. Essex, England, came to America about 1638: Joseph, James, Thomas and Samuel. Descendants of any of these are eligible to this Coat-of-Arms.

Other Fitch families who came early have not been connected with the co. Essex family. The first in the country was Capt. Matthew who landed in Richmond, Va., in 1607, and was lost at sea two years later. Deacon Zachary came from St. Albans, co. Hartford, to Lynn, Mass., in 1633, later residing in Reading. Fitchburg, Mass., was named after his great grandson John, a hero in the French and Indian War.

Thomas, son of Thomas, and grandson of Deacon Zachary, was a prominent and wealthy merchant, also a representatve to the Assembly, a magistrate, and a colonel in the army; he bequeathed a fund to Harvard for a student of the ministry. Some intermarriages in this family before the Revolution were with the Crosbys, Sheldons, Gates, Benjamins, Duttons, Downes, Hicksons, Olivers, Hunts, Chases, Blodgetts, Pitts, Austins and Gibsons. Many prosperous business men, and office holders among them.

Turning back to the family first mentioned, who bore the Arms; in the Herald's Visitation of Essex of 1612, there is a pedigree of the FYTCHE family dating from 1250, when John Fytche of Fytche Castle, in the reign of Henry III, lived in the northwest part of Essex. Most, perhaps all of the generations are given down to the Thomas of Bocking, father of the four sons who came to America. He was born in 1590, and died in 1645.

Probably the best genealogy on this family is by Roscoe Conkling Fitch, of Ludington and Detroit, Michigan, —"History of the Fitch Family, A.D. 1400 to 1930," in two volumes. This book is splendidly illustrated, and bears several certificates proving this Coat-of-Arms as belonging to the Essex family. The author gives pictures of Alfred Lord Tennyson whose mother was in this Fitch line, and of Percy Bysshe Shelley, also related.

Thomas of Bocking, in his will, provided for his son James a fund whereby he should have 100 pounds "when he shall be an A.B. of two years' standing at Cambridge University, for I desire he should be bred as a scholar." James received his A. M. degree from Cambridge, and came to this country prepared for the ministry. Besides his regular duties as a pastor, he was often called upon for advice in government matters. His eldest son, Major General James Fitch II, gave the first nails and glass for the erecting of Yale University buildings, and, in 1701, 637 acres of land firmly established the location of Yale.

Other descendants of Rev. James are Dr. Ebenezer, first president of Williams College, Clyde Fitch, dramatist, and U. S. Senator Graham Newell Fitch of Indiana.

John Fitch, inventor of the steamboat, was a descendant of Joseph, one of the four sons.

Thomas, descendant of Thomas, was governor of the colony of Connecticut, 1754 to 1766. His son Thomas was the first "Yankee Doodle."

The Fitch Family Association, which seldom holds reunions, is very active in accumulating records and preserving historic sites. Their records show that the forwarding of school systems, and an interest in all lines of research, have followed through the generations as a family characteristic.

Of the first four brothers, Thomas and Joseph were founders of Norwalk, Conn., and Rev. James of Norwich and Lebanon, Conn. Samuel remained in Hartford as a school teacher. They were all men of means, and owned large acreages, but the weight of their influence was far greater than the weight of their gold.

The Coat-of-Arms

He beareth for Arms: Vert a chevron between 3 leopards' faces or. Crest A leopard's head cabossed or, in the mouth a sword proper, hilt gules.

This description is registered in both Burke's General Armory and Fairbairn's Book of Crests. The ancient spelling of Ffytche and the more modern Fitch are both given, with slight differences: for instance one has the sword in the leopard's mouth "fesswise" or straight across; one "in bend sinister", that is, diagonally from upper left to lower right; and a third does not mention the direction.

The shield is green (vert) charged with a chevron between three leopards' faces all of gold (or). Color-names are never repeated, therefore as there is no color-name after "chevron," we know it is of the same color as the next charge, gold.

"A leopard's head cabossed" is the same as a 'leopard's face;' that is, the front of the head, but no neck showing. The head in the crest has in its mouth a sword of natural color, or "proper," with a red (gules) handle, or hilt.

The spots of the leopard represent the eyes of Providence looking in every direction, thus, a far-sighted man. He also symbolizes "a valiant and hardy warrior, who enterprises hazardous things by force and courage."

The sword is emblematical of preparation for service.

Colors are representative of the personal characteristics of the original bearer, and are granted only upon merit. Green signifies sturdiness and and strength; gold, generosity and elevation of mind.

CREST CORNER

I have a correspondent who writes me his views believing, I think, I will relay them in HOBBIES. He is a good searcher, and knows his subject, hav- years of experience behind him. He does not hesitate to criticize me if he does not agree with me, but always constructively and in a kindly manner which I like.

His last letter rather scoffs at people who are proud of the royal blood in their veins, as though their only reason for tracing their lineage to royalty was to show they did have royal blood in their veins, and thus feel "above" others. I do not believe they do feel that way. My acquaintance is large among those who are interested, and I believe, without exception, I can say they search from the historical standpoint to find out who their ancestors were, what they did, what countries they came from, what events look place during their lifetime, their migration, and so forth, also, always to find more ancestors, like filling in a crossword puzzle, it is intriguing.

Certainly one person could not think he had any "great prestige" if he were of royal descent, for if he does the tracing, he would soon find out that practically every one has royal blood, no matter how poor or uneducated he may be.

However, as usual, this correspondent brings out some interesting figures, which some of you readers may not have known. Most of us, in tracing back to William the Conqueror, would find there were 33 or 34 generations intervening. In doubling the number in generation as we count back, which is both the simple and accurate method, 33 generations would give William the Conqueror as ancester number 4,294,967,296.

Probably many of you have numbered your ancestors in this fashion: I have gone into the millions on several lines, and billions, and one gentleman is over one trillion! Suppose I had each person in each line! The world would not hold my charts!

One thing must be remembered, that we go through one line several times, in many instances. For example, in Nantucket, where the population was small, and cousins married cousins, I go through the Tristram-Coffin line three times, Bunker four, and two or three others, three times. So the actual count of persons in our lines is much smaller than the count of ancestors, as so many are repeated.

He makes the point here that the share of royal blood would be infinitestimal. That's all right with me, and no doubt with you. The main idea for us is that we should know and pass on to our families the knowledge of those in our families who helped to build our America; and if for history's sake and a broader education, we wish to delve in deeper, certainly we can do so without being too puffed about having royal blood.

—o—

Recently in a church service, the congregation read together the following prayer. It was so appropriate for this column, and especially for this number, and for us all to be thinking at any time, that I wanted all of you to have the opportunity of having it for yourselves. Its message is my message for you in this month.

"Almighty God, who in the former time didst lead our fathers forth into a wealthy place, give Thy grace, we humbly beseech Thee, to us, Thy children, that we may always approve ourselves a people mindful of Thy favor, and glad to do Thy will. Bless our land with honorable industry, sound learning, and pure religion. Defend our liberties, preserve our unity.

"Save us from violence, discord and confusion, from pride and arrogancy, and from every evil way. Fashion into one happy people the multitudes brought hither out of many kindreds and tongues. Imbue with the spirit of wisdom those whom we intrust in Thy Name with the authority of governance, to the end that there be peace at home, and that we keep a place among the nations of the earth.

"In the time of prosperity fill our hearts with thankfulness, and in the day of trouble suffer not our trust in Thee to fail; amen."
